Many elements lie behind the problems of crime. There are important social elements such as the difficulties of unemployment, the disaffection of individuals and the degrees of alienation that many young people feel towards society. There are problems arising from our physical environment. A system of crimewatch has been established in Islington on the initiative of the London borough of Islington's police authority. The system has the support of the police committee support unit. The object of the crimewatch system is to set up a series of crime prevention working parties in the districts where the crimewatch system operates. The neighbourhood offices — they are part of the council's decentralisation programme—have as one of their jobs the operation of a crime prevention working party, which involves local community associations and tenants' associations. The working party examines the causes of crime, the safety of people walking along the streets and in estates at night, racial attacks, especially those on minority ethnic communities, lighting in council estates and many other matters.

The council has shown a commendable sense of responsibility towards the community in setting up the crimewatch system and involving the local community in it. I hope that I shall hear from the Minister of State that the Home Office is aware of what Islington is trying to do and of the co-operation that it has received from local community organisations. I hope also that he will say that he is prepared to extend the idea to other parts of the country, instead of going along with the Metropolitan police's obsession with public relations, which leads them to remove their contact with elected representatives of the people while they attempt to relate to everyone by means of press releases and media handouts.

The Minister of State will do well if he can tell us exactly what the cost is to be of reorganisation, and especially the cost of the new buildings that will be erected around London.

The debate is an unsatisfactory way of dealing with the immense problems which many people face in London. They feel that the police are not responding adequately to their worries and concerns. They do not see the police force in London as a responsive unit. Instead, they consider it to be extremely expensive, inefficient, bureaucratic and undemocratic.

1.13 pm

Mr. Harry Greenway (Ealing, North): I was most interested in what the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) had to say about the possible relationship —he said direct relationship—between unemployment, bad housing and crime. There is not a shred of evidence to support his views. In my professional career in teaching, I talked to the unemployed and their children. I often found that they were proud people and suffering greatly through not having a job. I found also that the last thing in which they were interested was crime.

One of the great men of our age—I feel that hon. Members on both sides of the House will agree with me —is Bishop Trevor Huddleston, who is a lifelong friend of mine. He was inspired to become a priest in the Church of England by Father Basil Jellicoe, whose spiritual campaign, and campaign as the vicar of Somers Town in the 1920s, was based on the removal of slum housing. He argued that it should all be swept away as it was leading to massive social deprivation and crime. Since then, and partly as a result of his great and inspired campaigning, that housing has been completely replaced by brand new housing, but the crime rate now is higher than it was then. Even Trevor Huddleston accepts that there is no correlation between the two. It is easy to feel that there might be, but I do not believe that there is.

I wish to pay tribute to the London mounted police, who have so often been vilified by anti-police elements, including the GLC and members of the Labour party, and others. The police horses of London are among the most gentle horses that one could meet. They have a difficult role to play in policing rough crowds at football matches and also in their long-established role of policing well-behaved crowds.

The wonderful thing is that non-riders can apply to become mounted police officers. Someone with no ability to ride can be taken to Imber Court, taught to ride and trained gradually to handle difficult situations—such as last year's miners' strike, crowds given to violence, those going to and from soccer matches, and massive demonstrations. They do that with enormous competence. We never hear of horses kicking, maiming or injuring members of the public, even when they are terribly provoked. That is a great tribute to their basic training and to the way in which their riders are taught to handle them. Their duties are well done.

Echo was a notable police horse a few years ago. It was present when the IRA blew up and killed 12 soldiers and 7 horses in Hyde park. It survived that and continued with its duties for a short time, but eventually had to be retired because it was suffering from shock. During that period of illness from shock, the horse, by instinct and its training, carried out its duties competently. All those involved in the mounted police branch, mounted or not, should be congratulated on what they do.

The public relations of the mounted branch are good. The horses are taken to public events. The public can meet them, pat them and enjoy being with them. That is evidence of the fact that they are among the most gentle creatures in the world.

Police dog-public relations are admirable. There is a nursery school in my constituency which is 25 years old this month. To my amazement and horror, the police took an alsatian police dog to be with the children one morning. I should remind the House that I experienced being attacked and bitten twice by an alsatian during the last general election, so that, while I am a great dog lover, I take great care when I see alsatians about. That police dog was so well handled by its handler that the children could sit on its back, pat it and play with it, and under the handler's complete control it did extremely well. I am a keen dog lover, and that election incident has not put me off dogs.

I echo what my hon. Friend the Member for Surbiton (Mr. Tracey) said about the Greater London council's anti-police film. I have raised the matter in the House twice this week. The film should be withdrawn. If the GLC is concerned about maintaining law and order in London, and if it wants reasonable relations between the police and the public, it should withdraw that film. I call upon it to do so. Vicious scenes in it are deliberately intended to show the police in a bad light. The police's basic job is to maintain freedom for all of us before the law. The people who attack the police most and in the most vicious terms are almost always the first to seek their protection if anything goes wrong, so they would do well to remember that they are ill-advised to undermine that thin blue line any further. If they succeed, everyone will suffer seriously, particularly the old and those ill-equipped to defend themselves.

I echo what many of my hon. Friends have said in the debate, that burglary is a substantial problem in the metropolis. There is no question but that even more attention needs to be given to ways of protecting people's homes. The neighbourhood watch scheme is admirable, excellent and going well. However, we cannot sit back and say that that excellent scheme is taking care of the situation. It is doing a lot, but there is still a large amount of burglary on every sort of housing estate and in every sort of area—not only in wealthy areas. Even poor people are being burgled.

Particularly this week, I have heard of people having belongings taken when they are moving into a new home. They might have moved a few belongings into the new house in advance of moving in properly. The burglars watch for that, and they take television sets, washing machines, driers and so on that are put in in advance. That is a new sort of burglary, which requires careful attention and thought.

People on holiday have great cause to worry about their homes. There seems to be no way of securing a home in a foolproof way against burglary, although the police give admirable advice. I recommend everybody to consult the police on how to put special locks on windows, doors and so on.

Local police consultative committees have been mentioned. They are unquestionably valuable forums for the meeting of police and representatives of the public on a regular basis. The police need to have a feel of what people in the community are saying and thinking. Members of the community have an equally urgent need to understand what the police are trying to do. I cannot understand why, in so many areas, the Socialists and the Labour party have boycotted those police consultative committees. They have done so in Ealing. That is to their detriment, and it is sad and disgraceful.

Partnership between the police and the public is essential. It can come only through police consultative committees and other such forums.

Mr. Soley: Does the hon. Gentleman agree that the police should have consulted local authorities and others on the new management structures?

Mr. Greenway: The police have been in constant consultation with Parliament, the Home Secretary and elected representatives of Londoners.

Mr. Soley: They have not.

Mr. Greenway: I think that they have done the right thing. I myself have had discussions. That puts what the hon. Gentleman said into perspective——

Mr. Soley rose——

Mr. Greenway: I should like to continue my speech. I think that the hon. Gentleman will have an opportunity to speak later. I can only speak from my own experience.

[Mr. Greenway]

The only way to cure the social and soccer violence which has so worried the country recently must be to improve religious and moral education in schools. The hon. Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley) seemed to do a double take at that statement, but I am serious. No society can be controlled by force. In the end, people must control themselves. That can come only if people accept a reasonable moral code, which, for me, is based on religious principles, but which may be more broadly based. Such acceptance must come from teaching in schools. However, there is no religious or moral education in our comprehensive schools after the third year. A recent report said that in two thirds of all primary schools those teaching religious education are confused and do not know what they are doing. If they do not know what they are doing, how much chance have the children of grasping the difference between right and wrong and the fact that society must be based on the principle of love thy neighbour rather than on the ability to punch harder than the next man? I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will use all of his influence to press those who are responsible to improve religious education, including proper acts of worship at morning assemblies.

Police visits are an essential part of the police relationship with the community and of helping children to understand what the police do and their role in society. There is nothing like a friendly talk from a policeman to encourage children not to talk to strangers and to learn how to cross the road properly and safely. Such matters are fundamental to the safety of children. It is disgraceful that the police are excluded from some schools in the metropolis. That is wicked, damaging and unfair to children and their parents. Policemen should not be strangers to children. Children should not be alienated from them by vicious films such as the GLC video, which we have already discussed today.

Schools have a responsibility to keep their curriculums interesting and dynamic and to keep children interested in attending school. High truancy rates in some parts of London present serious problems for the police. In some areas, 30 to 40 per cent. of children are out of school on any one day. If they are out of school, they are running about the streets and getting up to terrible mischief. A few months ago I met a 12-year-old boy who was appearing before the courts for taking and driving away a motor vehicle. He admitted to me that he had taken a Jaguar in the Lewisham area and driven it right across London to visit a friend and then back again. The mind boggles. He also told me that he had been truanting for a long time. He was a nice little boy and obviously had a lot of initiative, but he must be kept in school working and learning, preparing himself for life. That is the true outlet for such initiative, character and determination. He should not be pinching Jaguars, or any other cars, and driving them all over the place.

A terrible term—pigs—is often applied to the police. A substantial number of people, including members of the GLC and the Labour party, refer to the police as pigs. It would be bad enough to do so in a clandestine way, but to refer to the police in such a derogatory fashion is not only grossly insulting to a dedicated and fine body of men and women, but also damages their standing with the public. We know that that is the intention of those who so describe the police, but the term should be repudiated every time they say it or write it.

I welcome the fact that my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary is trying to bring some sense into the policing of demonstrations. All those who want to hold demonstrations in London should not be allowed to do so freely every week, at enormous expense to the ratepayers and taxpayers. Demonstrations become a way of life. When I lived in Oxford House, Bethnal Green, a few years ago, a girl who was living in the settlement at the same time went on a different demonstration every week. For most of the time she did not know what she was going to demonstrate about. I asked her, "What is the demonstration tomorrow, Deborah?" and she replied, "I don't know what it is, but we are meeting at such and such a place."

If large numbers of people are demonstrating for sport, we do not want to deny them their sport, but one has to take some account of the huge cost of demonstrations to the people of London. Some kind of control must be exercised over the number of demonstrations that can be mounted by a particular group of people.

Mr. Ernie Roberts (Hackney, North and Stoke Newington): The police force is supposed to be democratic and is expected to look after the interests of all the people in Britain, irrespective of race, colour or creed, but that is not so in the area that I represent. Black people, and others, are continually in conflict with the police because of the way that they are treated. I have examples here of complaints by my constituents that have been discussed with various Home Secretaries and others over many years.

Some of the cases have dragged on for years. I have met Home Secretaries, Ministers, more than one Commissioner and assistant commissioner, as well as commanders and chief superintendents to discuss the bad policing and the conflict between the police and the community in my constituency. The bad relationships continue.

I have in my hand a copy of a large advertisement that appears today in the local press. Its heading is "The independent committee of inquiry into policing in Hackney." It says that written submissions of evidence are invited. The chairman of the inquiry is the Reverend David Moore. It refers to

> "(A) the death of Colin Roach and the surrounding circumstances. (B) Stoke Newington police station. (C) The relationship between the police and the black community."

Those are some of the issues that are to be investigated by the committee. The committee has to do the job because the Home Secretary has refused to do it. Replying to one request, the Home Office stated:

> "The Home Secretary has . . . carefully considered the case for a wider form of enquiry into policing in Stoke Newington generally. He appreciates that there is genuine concern about past events and real anxiety about the future of community/police relationships, but he is not convinced that a wide-ranging public enquiry would be in the best interests of community/police relations in the borough."

The public and their representatives are getting together to look into past and present problems that have been brought to their attention. The Roach case is only the tip of the iceberg. Many demonstrations took place and hundreds of people were arrested during that conflict. The Home

Secretary must appreciate that there is still a demand for a public inquiry to be held into that case, even though several years have passed. The public are not satisfied with what has happened.

The Knight case has dragged on for years. Similarly, there is concern about the infamous White case in 1976 which continued for years and resulted in £51,000 being awarded against the police.

The way in which police in London deal with missing persons is also of considerable concern. The police found Colin Barnard's mother six months after he had been cremated. They later apologised. It is obvious that a proper procedure is needed to deal with missing persons. A campaign is being conducted to discover the whereabouts of the many thousands of missing persons.

I was invited to look into a procedure set up at Scotland Yard to deal with this problem. It must have been impossible to find the names of missing persons in the former system involving numerous filing cabinets and thousands of cards. The system has now been computerised, which I hope will mean that there is a better chance of obtaining information. These matters should not be left until the public complain about the activities of the police in searching for missing persons.

The public are concerned about cases in which black women are put into prison for a week, and then set free. Often, the police pick up people suffering from mental diseases or epilepsy and keep them in prison until their relatives discover where they are and get them out.

I am also worried about stop and search. Young black people out at night are told to stand against a wall, spread their legs and put up their hands. They are then searched. One young fellow told me that this had happened to him three times.

The Hackney Council for Racial Equality has a dossier of 40 cases, some of which have been passed on to me. The council has demanded an independent inquiry into policing in Hackney.

A member of the police force in my area has given me a document of several pages involving complaints against high-ranking police officers. He brought the case to me because, although he had the right, he had been stopped from giving it to the Commissioner. When I put the report in the Commissioner's hands, I said that it was from the sort of young policeman whom the Commissioner wanted in the police force and who should be protected as he was prepared to make allegations about the bad behaviour of his superiors. That was about six months ago, and I have not yet received a reply. I should like to know what has happened in that case, especially to the young policeman. I think that he was a detective who was moved around.

I, like the hon. Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway), am worried about the relationship between schools and the police. In Hackney the lack of faith in and dissatisfaction at the behaviour of the police is so great that the teachers exclude the police from the schools. There have also been many complaints from parents. I have had meetings with police commanders, deputy assistant commissioners and others about the Finsbury park, Manor park and Brownswood road areas, where young blacks are constantly stopped and searched, and arrested on charges of obstruction. Unemployed young people cannot keep walking, they must stand still sometimes. They should not be moved on for standing on the pavement and talking to their friends, or picked up on a charge of obstruction, if they refuse to move on. The use of the SPG, about which there were complaints and which has been replaced by the special control unit, still gives rise to concern and complaints.

Our citizens want to see policemen on the estates, the streets and the beat, but not in fast-moving vehicles screaming through the streets. In many cases the police over-react. Such over reactions are recorded in many photographs in the document "Policing London" under the heading "Routine Over-reaction" which states:

"The use of excessive force and routine over-reaction can be understood as a response to boredom."

That excuse is not enough.

We want less policing of the "Starsky and Hutch" variety. I think that the police watch too much televisiion and try to repeat on the streets of London the antics of those whom they watch. It is time that they were taken out of their cars and put on the streets where people want to see them, can talk and complain to them and where, if a mugging takes place, there should be easy access to a policeman.

Hackney borough council has set up a police committee. Over the years there have been constant attempts to get the Home Office to agree to the police being represented on it, or even attending it. Representatives of the community groups and of all the political parties of the council are represented on it. They do not kid themselves that the Committee has any legal authority. It is of a consultative nature, as the Home Secretary knows. However, it could be even more useful in getting co-operation between the community and the police.

It is time that the Home Secretary and the Commissioner looked at these matters more carefully. A consultative committee has been set up in my area, chaired by the chairman of the local chamber of commerce. The two local Members of Parliament are invited to attend. It would be much more useful, however, if the police also sent a representative to the Hackney borough council police committee. There could then be an exchange of views, it would be clear that the council was being treated in a responsible way by the police and the committee would be assisted in its consideration of the problems of policing in the area.

Finally, I wish to make certain demands to the Home Secretary about policing in London. As my colleagues have pointed out, the police need to be democratised. Sometimes individuals need to be protected from police abuse. We need a rearrangement of police functions and internal organisation and new priorities in the deployment and aims of policing in London.

Much police time in London is spent on social work. In my view, the police are not properly trained for that and do not constitute a suitable agency for such work, which is best carried out by the specially trained personnel employed by the social services.

It must be made clear that crimes against the community are more important than crimes against the holders of capital. We need more community policing, more police on the beat and less of the "Starsky and Hutch" type overreaction that so often occurs.

1.47 pm

Mr. Harry Cohen (Leyton): In the first debate on policing in London after the 1983 general election, the Under-Secretary of State spent virtually the whole of his speech boasting that Red Ken's efforts to control the police had been beaten off for ever. I think that that is a fair summary. The Minister tried to personalise a serious issue facing London. The debate was not about Ken Livingstone. It was, and it still is, about accountability. It is an argument about democracy. Moreover, the Minister was wrong, because the move for accountability has not been beaten off. It is the return of the repressed. The movement has come back even stronger and it is a growing constituency, as the Tories will discover to their cost.

Accountability is still very much a live issue because of the rising crime rate. There have been record increases in crime every year, and I suspect that the figures for the past year will be even higher because London was left to the criminals while the police were taken elsewhere to do the Government's dirty work against the miners. The clear-up rate is also pathetically low—just 8 per cent. for burglaries in my area. The police have been shown to be increasingly ineffective in stopping the rising crime rate. That is why accountability becomes ever more necessary and higher on the political agenda.

It is unfortunate, but true, that the public's alienation from the police runs deep in all sectors of the community, and it is not smoothed over by Tories saying, "The police are doing a wonderful job. Let's leave it to them." As one of my hon. Friends said in an aside, "You might as well give the public a police horse to stroke and all will be well." That approach will not solve the problems.

Police-community relations are at a low ebb, and there are many reasons for it. The police are perceived as a force and not as a service to the community. They are increasingly seen as overtly political. Against the miners, they were put in the forefront of that political role by the Government, and in London we saw them even harassing people who wanted to make collections to support miners' families on the poverty line. They are used politically against blacks and the ethnic minorities. They are used against the Left. My hon. Friend the Member for Hackney, North and Stoke Newington (Mr. Roberts) did not quote the headline which I have in my possession. Newman said in his last report:

The police perceive the Left as the enemy.

What is more, the police are often seen by the public as being above the law. There is not an independent complaints procedure. The police investigate themselves. The figure for successful complaints—assuming that people bother to go that far with the procedure, because often many give up without going through it—is a little over 1 per cent. That does not inspire confidence.

People see that they do not have any real say. I remind the House that £400 million is spent on the police by Londoners, but they have no control or effective say. It is because of that lack of democracy that the police are so slow to react to community needs.

The alienation is in all parts of the community, but it is very high amongst the ethnic minorities. Polls taken from those living in ethnic communities show an immense lack of confidence in the police.

In my own Waltham Forest area, there have been calls for vigilantes amongst those groups to defend their communities. I oppose the idea, because those ethnic minorities pay their taxes and have the right to proper police protection. They should not have to resort to vigilantes. But the calls have been fueled by racial attacks, including some terrible murders in east London, and the police have been slow to realise the racist nature of many assaults and harassments. During this Session of Parliament, I intend to introduce my Racial Harassment Bill under the ten minutes rule with a view to making such conduct an offence and tightening the law. But the police must step up their campaign against racists if they are to get the confidence of the ethnic minorities.

The police need the support of the community. The recently published Leyton police divisional report recognises that. It says:

"There is abundant evidence that police action is insufficient to reduce crime. The aim of gaining the active co-operation of others is imperative."

Efforts are being made. Some are real. Others, I am sorry to say, are token efforts. But the reality is that, because of Home Office negligence and the overall lack of accountability of the police, the opposite is true. There is less public confidence in the police.

Another cause of alienation is the obsession of the police with moving to high tech, which is often not properly thought out and certainly is not cost-effective, instead of getting policemen on the beat, with the confidence and support of the public.

I shall give three examples of high-tech policing and its disturbing implications. The first relates to the tracking bugs which the police can place on cars. In the recent case of Mr. Colin King, it was shown that the police had placed such a device on the car of a man who had no criminal record and who was subsequently acquitted in court. The police officers who used it now await trial for setting up a bank robbery. The case has serious implications, because it is another step in the increasing intrusion into people's private lives and disregard for their civil liberties. The police should not be allowed to track cars simply because they do not like someone or, as in Mr. King's case, his friends. That amounts to harassment and intimidation.

The guidelines on the use of such devices are lax. At least when the police want a search warrant, they must obtain authorisation from a high-ranking officer or, independently, from a justice of the peace. There is no such safeguard here. The Secretary of State must approve any telephone tapping, but he need not approve car bugging. There is no compensation for the victims of unjustified bugging.

It might be said that innocent people have nothing to fear from this high-tech intrusion into their lives. However, people's private lives are not shop windows. If the police themselves were bugged, we would catch many more crooked policemen, but, rightly, there would be outrage from the Police Federation. Civil liberties apply to everyone, not just to the police. The fact that the Home Secretary has no control over the use of car bugs means that it has become much more widespread.

The second example is the automatic fingerpinting machine purchased by the Metropolitan police for £1,654,000. No doubt its running costs are also substantial. However, identifications have increased by only one a day. That is not real value for money, and I do not believe that the Minister can justify it. I know that he sent me a letter on the subject, but I wish to quote the draft Home Office circular of September 1984:

"The AFR system at New Scotland Yard has the capacity to make one million comparisons a day. This is a very substanial figure but is small in relation to the size of the database which the system could hold. For example, only four marks a day could be searched against an entire collection of 250,000 sets of prints (ie 2·5 million digits). Moreover, if the marks could not be identified as belonging to a particular digit the search could take up to 10 times as long. Preliminary trials with an alternative make of AFR system have indicated that it is faster but less accurate." The Home Office draft circular shows that the technology is too slow. The police should have anticipated that and should not have spent £2 million on a system only to find out that it is too slow. The Minister has a duty to get value for money from high tech.

The third example is the police national computer. A recent parliamentary question from me elicited the amount of information that is stored from the computer. There are many implications relating to the number of car records on it. The police can obtain someone's name and address immediately by asking the computer. They never used to be able to obtain the address.

The criminal names index with its 5 million names has created a stir. One person in 10 is categorised as a criminal. When the figures were published, one criminologist said that one man in three in his lifetime is likely to be categorised as a criminal. People are being stigmatised. That is serious, particularly at a time of high unemployment, because people might find it more difficult to get a job if their names appear on the index. If the trend continues, Britain is likely to have more criminals than workers. There is a long way to go before we reach that position, but that is the trend.

The increasing number of secret records on individuals has all the hallmarks of police states throughout the world, yet the Home Office is letting it happen. No guidelines have been issued about the names that go on the criminal names index or about their removal. I received a letter recently from a man who was stopped for a car check and the police knew that he had stolen a bottle of milk 22 years ago when he was only 16. That letter is on its way to the Home Office.

How soon does information go on the computer? Does it go on before a person is acquitted by the courts? Access is another problem. Terminals are being set up in police stations throughout the country. What rules govern who can have access to the information? Information could find its way to finance companies or blackmailers. Individuals do not have access to their own records or the opportunity to correct errors. The Home Office has ignored all the serious implications.

The Guardian of 13 June summarised three key issues effectively:

"First, the decision to computerise must be taken properly and openly, after effective consultation and with stringent evaluation of the effectiveness of the investment . . . Second, computerisation should be confined to proper police functions" — not rumours and gossip or "so-called criminal intelligence."

"Finally . . . there must be effective safeguards for the individual."

The Guardian was right in that respect.

High tech has serious implications which have been ignored by the Home Office. Community policing is being ignored in the high-tech drive and the crime rate is rising. High-tech policing is bad value for money. A better job could be done through community policing.

Under the victim support scheme, 587 local referrals have been made since November 1984. The Department of the Environment turned down the urban aid application for that scheme, but the much-despised GLC came to its rescue. The Department of the Environment and the Home Office squabbled about who should foot the bill.

The Government have a responsibility for the social conditions which increase crime in London and throughout the country. They are responsible for unemployment and the cut in services. People who are jobless, who receive no help and are bitter, might well reject the order in society. That might have bitter consequences for Britain's youth. The immigration laws give encouragement to racism, and the Government have a responsibility in that connection, too.

The Tories have fostered a society based on personal acquisitiveness and greed instead of co-operation. That is the main reason why they are the guilty men in terms of policing in London. In the main, it is not a question of the police doing a good or bad job—although the lack of accountability leads to the latter — but of the Government having failed to stem the rising tide of crime. Instead, they are fostering the conditions for crime.

2.5 pm

Mr. Clive Soley (Hammersmith): Throughout the Commissioner's report are references to the fact that the police alone cannot deal with the crime rate. That point has been stressed by many of my hon. Friends and, to a limited extent, by Conservative Members. Perhaps the biggest criticism one can make of the debate derives from the complacency of the remarks of the Home Secretary and of some of his hon. Friends.

Twenty years ago there was one police officer for every 602 citizens in the United Kingdom. Today there is one for every 393. Under the Tories, however, the crime rate has been rocketing and there has been continual disorder. The message is clear. The Government cannot introduce socially and economically divisive policies and expect the police to deal with the consequences. That has happened and that is why this, more than any other, Government have exploited the law and order issue. They did it in 1979 and again in 1983, although it back-fired on them. If they want proof of that, they need only read the Police Review, which criticised them during the miners' strike for using the police to enforce their industrial relations policy. A headline to that effect appeared in that publication.

The booklet "Principles of Policing and Guidance for Professional Behaviour", issued by the Metropolitan police, contains some interesting matter which I would quote if there were time. The Commissioner deals on page 2 with the subject of the police not chasing up minor offences. That leads one to think of some of those who have been criminalised and brought before the courts as a result of demonstrations or industrial disputes, of which there are many.

One recognises the dangers that exist in Britain of using the police as the Government's private army. That is what the Tories have been trying to do. The police resent that as much as all firm and committed democrats resent it.

The victim support scheme is dealt with at page 61 of the report. The GLC has been criticised by Conservative Members. I repeat, for the benefit of the hon. Members for Surbiton (Mr. Tracey) and for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway)—I appreciate why the latter is no longer in the Chamber—that the quotation to which they referred from the film came from a man reading from some poetry as part of a poetry reading. Are we to assume that every organisation which films or provides detail of every line of poetry or piece of literature is in some way endorsing the remarks that are made? Does the Home Secretary believe that one line from a poem represents even the poet's view of the whole?

I have seen the film and I fear that I must tell the hon. Member for Ealing, North that he tried to use it as a propaganda weapon and in a way, frankly, that would have made even Dr. Goebbels feel ashamed. I appreciate that a by-election campaign is in progress and that the Government are worred about that, but that was sinking to a low level.

Mr. Tracey rose——

Mr. Soley: I would normally give way, but time does not permit me to do so.

The GLC has been funding the London victim support scheme since 1981 and at present there is an application in for £17,672. That application, which is backed by the GLC police committee and the police support unit, is with the Secretary of State. I believe that the money is unlikely to be forthcoming. I hope that when he replies to the debate the Minister will announce whether the Government intend to give the victim support scheme that money.

How will his Department fund the victim support scheme after the abolition of the GLC? I challenge him to answer that question today. The Commissioner says in his report that those bodies give full backing to the scheme but that the Government will not finance it. Let us have an answer to that question in the next 15 or 20 minutes.

I urge the Home Secretary to consider again the report of the all-party penal affairs group on prevention of crime among young people. The rate of recorded crime for those aged between 14 and 16 years is higher than that for any other age group. The second highest rate is for those aged between 17 and 20 years. We can do much to prevent crime among those who fall within those age groups, but what has happened? The Government have cut every decent prevention scheme worth its name.

The Home Secretary and other Conservative Members have talked about neighbourhood watch schemes. Neighbourhood watch is the fig leaf with which they try to cover their nakedness on this issue. I am not opposed to neighbourhood watch, but the assumptions that are being made about its success rate are not proven. If they were, I should be cheering along with everyone else. Some evidence suggests that neighbourhood watch works well in certain suburban areas, but there is a problem because it consumes manpower that could be used elsewhere. At the end of the day it may prove its usefulness throughout the country but I suspect that it will prove to be especially useful in certain areas while not providing the complete answer in others.

It has been shown by the National Association for the Care and Resettlement of Offenders that the safe neighbourhood unit does much better than neighbourhood watch. The unit is funded by the GLC; is that not amazing? The Government appear not to be interested in the unit. It is engaged in crime prevention and the Government appear to take the view that it can go or that it can be funded by others. Who will replace the unit when the Government abolish the GLC?

It is the vandalised and run-down areas that face the major problem. Burglary is a nationwide problem. The chance of being burgled is about 1:40 throughout England and Wales. It is 1:12 in inner city areas. Neighbourhood watch will not be able to resolve that problem. However, many suggestions are made in the all-party document to which I have referred and in a document which has been prepared by NACRO, which has submitted various schemes. My right hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Gorton (Mr. Kaufman) has referred to some of them, which involve the provision of more caretakers, better locks and doors, improved housing standards, the provision of nursery facilities, getting families with young children out of high rise flats and many other matters. Much of this provision and many of these improvements have been cut by the Government over the past few years, or will be cut.

Will the Minister give the House a guarantee that any local authority that introduces a crime prevention scheme of a type of which he approves will not be rate-capped or targeted on the basis of the money that is made available for the scheme? In other words, will he ensure that the money for the scheme is available over and above the financial targets that have been set for local authorities? Let us have an answer to that question as well.

One small action of the Government that will do more to produce crime than any other act by any Minister is the board and lodging scheme. The NACRO surveys and many others show that young people who are homeless and adrift are highly vulnerable to getting into trouble with the police. The board and lodging scheme will keep young people on the move. It will increase vagrancy and drug addiction because a young homeless person is likely to become a runner to get money. He is likely to use drugs in the way that my hon. Friend the Member for Norwood (Mr. Fraser) described so vividly and so well.

The scheme will lead to alcohol abuse. One of the ways of coping with sleeping out at night is to drink heavily before settling down for a cold night. Alcohol, too, pushes people into crime. The scheme will cause misery for the young people who are part of it and for many others who will suffer the results of the problem.

Which of the recommendations set out in the all-party report on the prevention of crime among young people will the Home Secretary introduce and when will he implement them? I shall be content if the right hon. and learned Gentleman chooses to make an announcement on another occasion. We look forward to his statement at some stage.

The hon. Member for Ealing, North told us that he was consulted on the management issue. I understand why the hon. Gentleman has had to leave the Chamber. As I said in an intervention, he was not consulted. No London Member of Parliament was consulted. I am not even sure that the Home Secretary and the Minister were consulted. They might have been, but everyone accepts that that management scheme is not good in terms of consultation not just because it crosses borough boundaries, as has been said, but because it brings in different areas — the middle class suburbs with the inner city areas. It produces many consultation problems.

There must be democratic control of the police. Anyone who argues against that must be out of his or her mind. In the last century the House had a record of which we should be proud for setting up Select Committees that called evidence. Somehow we lost that in the recent past and had to regain it. The House set up committees to investigate riots, disorders and policing. One of my biggest criticisms of the Home Secretary is that we can have riots in Savernake forest and shootings in the streets of London, such as in the Baigrie case, and yet we do not have a statement in the House nor do we receive effective replies to the questions that we ask in letters to the Home Secretary. I still have not received a detailed reply from the Home Secretary about what he will do about shotguns and how Mr. Baigrie obtained that shotgun. We have had no answers or thoughts about that. The message that goes out to the British people is that the Government do not believe that those matters are important enough to make a statement about them in the House or in public. That is unacceptable.

I should like an answer today to my next question. I am deeply disturbed about the number of accidents in which the police have been involved. The Minister will know this because he has replied to written questions from me, but it seems that at least 26 police officers have been killed in police driving accidents, yet the police officers' training manual states:

"It is far better that a criminal should escape for the time being than that the crew of a Police Car and other road users should be exposed to grave risk of injury."

I do not believe that this is an unreasonable request, but I hope that the Minister will ensure that the figures are soon available. Our questions have not been answered because, the Minister says, the information is not available. I understand why. It is unacceptable that so many police officers and other road users are killed and that no statement is made to the House or answers given to written questions. I ask the Minister to say that the figures will be collected and a statement made.

On firearms, I notice that page 157 of the report states that there has been an increase in new firearm certificates. When will the Home Office set up some departmental machinery to review the whole subject of guns, replica guns and other weapons and the issue of certificates?

I should have liked to speak about the need to provide compensation for police officers who are killed or injured on duty so that they no longer have to go through the Criminal Injuries Board procedure. I should also have liked to talk about the excessively bureaucratic nature of the new complaints procedure that has been introduced. We should much prefer a system based upon the ombudsman which would be less bureaucratic and therefore release more police officers to do the job that hon. Members want them to do.

The Government's record on law and order is a disgrace. They promised the world and delivered nothing. All that they have been able to fall back on has been the one fig leaf of neighbourhood watch, and vicious, unjustified attacks on the GLC which they cannot substantiate when they are asked. That is not an answer to the problems facing the people of this country.

2.18 pm

The Minister of State, Home Office (Mr. Giles Shaw): The hon. Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley) will allow me at least to comment on the fact that a Government who have increased resources for the police from £1·1 billion to £2·8 billion, and have increased the number of police officers by 12,500 in four years, have made a sufficient demonstration of a commitment to law and order.

The crime figures have increased continuously and alarmingly for many years, as the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton (Mr. Kaufman) correctly pointed out, but there can be no suggestion of anyone being complacent about significant increases in crime. It is in no sense a comfort, but the increase in crime in England and Wales between 1979 and 1984 was about 37 per cent. whereas in the Metropolitan police area it was 29 per cent. Crime in London has not increased as alarmingly as elsewhere.

That is the magnitude of the task that faces the Metropolitan police and the Commissioner. That is why every effort is being bent towards seeing that London policing is redesigned to make it more effective in the continuing fight against crime.

Many hon. Members raised different matters in the debate. One of the most significant was in connection with reorganisation. The hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) referred to the areas. I make it clear that the decision on the eight areas is final, but that the decision on the divisions and how that works is a matter for which consultation is still in order. That is the backbone of the reorganisation.

Let us be clear about why this reorganisation is taking place. As the Commissioner says on page 17 of his report, when he considers the rationale behind that major reorganisation:

"the rationale for change lay in:

badly defined roles which resulted in large parts of the organisation working towards their own ends rather than toward a shared purpose; too much energy and effort being wasted in keeping the organisation going instead of serving the mainline job of policing;

the size and power of headquarters strangling the Force, taking up valuable manpower and placing unnecessary demands on the remainder; and the tendency for the organisation to try to cope with problems through superficial changes in the bureaucratic system, rather than looking for real solutions."

With such importance attached to it, that a major structural change is subject to the Commissioner's operational decision, in consultation with the police authority. That is the decision that has been made. The consequence of that major change in structure will be to provide substantially more resources and, above all, substantially more focus on the boroughs, such as the one that the hon. Member for Newham, South represents—

Mr. Spearing: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Shaw: I cannot give way. The hon. Gentleman will appreciate that there are about nine minutes to go till the end of the debate.

Mr. Spearing: That is not the point. It is not a reorganisation.

Mr. Shaw: The fact remains that about 19 per cent. of the manpower of the Metropolitan police have been involved in the headquarters buildings. Therefore, the change represents an important release towards operational policing.

With regard to the divisions, the hon. Member for Newham, South will know that many boroughs already have cross borders with other police divisions. That has been so in the past. There is nothing peculiar about that. However, with regard to the decision to change from the original figure to eight——

Mr. Spearing: Reply to my point.

Mr. Shaw: The hon. Gentleman can write to me if he wishes, and I shall give him a proper answer. Other matters raised in the debate——

Mr. Spearing: Reply to my point. Read my speech.

Mr. Shaw: The hon. Gentleman is beside himself—

Mr. Spearing rose——

Mr. Shaw: I shall not give way.

I now refer to other points made by other hon. Members. My hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Mr. Wheeler), in an excellent contribution, made crime prevention his major theme. Although the hon. Member for Hammersmith does not appear to believe in the neighbourhood watch scheme and does not want to see it encouraged, it is a fact that it is one of the most important developments that the Commissioner has undertaken. About 1,200 neighbourhood watch schemes are now established in the metropolis and about 515 more are planned. That is an important part of the proceedings.

It is a vital part of the Commissioner's proposals that consultation be established throughout the metropolis in the areas in which the new police arrangements will be set. Consultation groups of the kind that the Commissioner has asked to be established under his new guidance will be the vital vehicle, the forum within which all those matters and issues can be discussed. It is important to note that funding will be available under the Metropolitan police budget to ensure that those groups are capable of supporting themselves administratively.

The hon. Member for Woolwich (Mr. Cartwright) referred to the Police Complaints Authority, which was also mentioned by several hon. Members, including the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen). The Police Complaints Authority, in its new guise, with its independent authority chaired by a former parliamentary ombudsman, provides infinitely greater independence in the handling of complaints, both in the supervision and direct handling of the more serious complaints. That arrangement has been widely welcomed, as it is regarded as a major change of quality and quantity in how complaints will be handled. I do not agree that the Police Complaints Authority should be tarred with the brush that it is not independent. It is substantially independent.

The right hon. Member for Gorton mentioned women recruits to the Metropolitan police. The force is making a considerable effort to improve its recruitment of women officers and to ensure that they are treated fairly. The Commissioner has set up a working party, assisted by a representative of the Equal Opportunities Commission, to undertake an overall review of the recruitment and employment of women in the force. All women who are interviewed for selection are interviewed by a panel which includes at least one senior woman police officer. In view of that, I hope that recruitment will improve. The right hon. Gentleman might wish to know that a woman was recently promoted to the rank of commander. She is the second to be promoted to that rank in the Metropolitan police.

The hon. Member for Norwood (Mr. Fraser) made a thoughtful speech and mentioned ethnic recruits. At the last count, there were 270 ethnic minority officers in the Metropolitan police, 228 male and 42 female, 20 of whom were in the CID. I hope that that answers his question about whether any detectives are drawn from minority groups.

Mr. Corbyn: Will the Minister give way?

Mr. Shaw: At the end of 1980 there were 108 ethnic minority officers in the force, so there has been a substantial improvement, although I understand that it might not be satisfactory to all.

Mr. Corbyn: What about non-uniformed staff?

Mr. Shaw: The main issue raised by some of my hon. Friends was that of increased establishments. Increased establishments have been the order of the day in the rapid growth of the Metropolitan police recently, but I must tell my hon. Friends, especially my hon. Friend the Member for Carshalton and Wallington (Mr. Forman), that there has been a significant improvement in cash resources and in manpower. The increase of 4,500 in the uniformed strength is equivalent to the entire police force of Merseyside. That is a major increase.

With the major structural change that is now in hand, the redeployment that it will bring, and with the increased resources now available, there should be a much better chance of more policemen being redeployed into the community and on to the beat, where hon. Members want them to be. Having about 19 per cent. of manpower employed in headquarters is hardly the best way in which to get optimum efficiency out of this huge metropolitan force. Although there is no significant increase in establishment in prospect, there has been consistent growth during the past five years and now, with the redeployment being engineered by the Commissioner, there should be a massive improvement in the number of police on other duties.

The debate has been characterised by the awful problems of dealing with crime and drugs and by the demand for further resources. I think that both sides of the House agree that the most important development is the increased commitment to the community having a role to play in policing. That has been recognised in the Commissioner's report and in the reorganisation.

Mr. Spearing: No.

Mr. Shaw: There will be community consultation——

Mr. Spearing: It is too late.

Mr. Shaw: —throughout the metropolis, which was not established before. Opposition Members should not assume that the borough is the sole gift for community representation when it comes to community policing. The remit of the Metropolitan police and its structure under my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary as police authority requires an all-London basis for consultation. The method of consultation outlined in the Commissioner's guidelines will stretch that consultation beyond the remit of borough councils. That is the intention, and it will be established soon.

With more than 26,000 officers, the Metropolitan police is the largest police force in the United Kingdom, but as this is a metropolitan capital city the force has a national role to play, which includes dealing with terrorism and the protection of diplomats and of royalty. However, its role is based upon the community of London which it seeks to serve. The House will conclude that the Commissioner's report for this year shows clearly how seized he is of these objectives and how determined he is to ensure that during his leadership of the force London will be better policed in the years to come.

It being half past Two o'clock, the motion for the Adjournment of the House lapsed, without Question put.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Ordered,

That, in respect of the Further Education Bill [Lords] and the Sporting Events (Control of Alcohol, etc.) Bill, notices of Amendments, new Clauses and new Schedules to be moved in Committee may be accepted by the Clerks at the Table before the Bill has been read a second time.

Ordered,

That, at the sitting on Wednesday 3 July, Standing Order No. 3 (Exempted business) shall apply to the Motion in the name of Mr. Secretary Hurd relating to the draft Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Northern Ireland) Order 1985 with the substitution of half-past Twelve o'clock or two and a half hours after it has been entered upon, whichever is the later, for the provisions in paragraph 1*(b)* of the Standing Order.—[Mr. Archie Hamilton.]

Mr. Brian Brown

Motion made and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Archie Hamilton.]

2.30 pm

Mr. Robin Cook (Livingston): I wish to raise a matter of the greatest gravity, arising out of the suicide of a constituent. This issue has moved me deeply, but I shall try to place it before the House in as dispassionate matter and with as little partisan flavour as possible. I am anxious that when the Minister for Social Security replies to the debate he should do so not in a spirit of seeking to justify what his Government have done but in a spirit of honestly examining the effect of the regulations. His junior Minister, the Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security, was challenged on this matter last weekend but did not show a willingness honestly to examine the effect of the regulations. He said:

"The whole campaign of opposition to the proposals is no more than political brouhaha . . . Nobody in need can slip through that net of exemptions. Opposition is coming solely from those individuals who cannot be bothered to look for jobs and prefer to live without effort off the B and B allowance."

I hope that it will be felt at the conclusion of my speech that that view is profoundly mistaken and gratuitously insulting.

The facts concerning my constituent can be briefly cestated and are not in dispute. He was 23 years old. His mother had remarried and lived with Brian's stepfather and stepbrother in my constituency. Brian had a history of psychiatric illness and had been a resident, on and off, for the best part of three years at Bangour village hospital in my constituency. In November he was discharged as fit and, as the phrase goes, returned to the community. He then went into board lodgings in Edinburgh, where he remained thereafter. His medical social worker drifted out of touch with him in January, but he was encouraged by the fact that Brian obviously wished to be independent and was seeking to get beyond reliance on the mental health system.

Brian appears to have lived reasonably satisfactorily for the next six months. Then on 17 May his world collapsed. He received a notice advising him that his weekly benefit would be reduced from £69·50 to £25·75 on 27 May. We know that thereafter he approached the Edinburgh housing department to seek rehousing, but for a number of years Edinburgh district council has built no new council houses and as a result has an enormous waiting list. There was no prospect of it being able to rehouse Brian and it was under no duty towards him, as a single person, under the Housing (Homeless Persons) Act 1977.

Brian was put out of the hotel where he was staying at the end of the week in which his benefit stopped. He was successful in finding accommodation in another establishment for a few nights but he was put out of it on 6 June. He slept rough for the next two nights and was last seen alive in the all-night cafeteria of Waverley railway station. Thereafter, he climbed on to the north bridge and threw himself off it. He went through the roof of the railway station on to the platform below. There is no doubt that he committed suicide and there is no doubt in my mind that it was induced by the state of despair and homelessness to which he was reduced by these regulations.

One of the first lessons to be learned from this case is that it is clear that Brian Brown was in one of the exemption categories but failed to get exemption from the regulations. The most alarming feature of his case is not that he was an exception but that his experience is all too common among the many other people who fail to get the exemption to which they are entitled under these regulations. Since the news that I had this Adjournment debate became public, I have received much correspondence from organisations and societies. Indeed, I have never had such a large mailbag on any single issue during the 12 years I have been a Member. All those representations frequently returned to the same point—the difficulty faced by those who are exempt in securing that exemption.

The Minister has received a list of such cases from the "That's Life" programme, which had conducted some excellent research into the impact of these regulations. He responded on Tuesday by suggesting that those individuals who were exempt should come forward and claim exemption. There are a number of problems with that approach, and I wish to illustrate them from Brian Brown's case.

The reason why Brian Brown could claim exemption was that he had a history of mental illness. I find it distasteful that anyone should have to seek the right to benefit by disclosure of that type of background. We know from his case that he was trying to get beyond his mental illness and his association with the mental hospital. He may well not have wished to come forward and make a claim for exemption on that basis, knowing that the inevitable effect would be to put him back in contact with the mental health system; otherwise, there was no way in which he could prove his case for exemption. The knowledge that that contact was in prospect may well have triggered a psychological reaction that predisposed him to suicide.

It is possible also that Brian Brown never knew that he was exempt. I have seen the application that he submitted to the housing department. It is clear that Brian was barely literate. I doubt that he read the accompanying literature or, if he read it, that he comprehended it.

There is another possibility—that Brian could have applied for exemption and been refused. It is clear that large numbers of cases that should be exempt have been unable to obtain exemption when they applied. I turn to one case from the "That's Life" programme which was featured last Sunday and which has been put to the Minister. It concerns a girl with severe epilepsy, suffering frequent epileptic fits, who applied for exemption on that basis. I should have thought that no hon. Member would doubt that that was qualification for exemption. By last Sunday, she had received a further letter from the DHSS stating that this did not qualify her for exemption.

There is a wide variation in the proportion of cases getting exemption. In the north-east, 80 per cent. of claimants at one DHSS office have been granted exemption. At one Scottish local office, only 2 per cent. of claimants have succeeded in getting exemption. It is impossible to look at that extraordinary rate of variation without concluding that some people entitled to exemption are not getting it.

There is another unsatisfactory feature of relying on the system of exemptions to make these regulations humane. It places upon these vulnerable young people a strong incentive to remain in one of the exempted categories and not get beyond it. Lothian social work department, at a time when it is being encouraged—indeed, forced—to reduce its staff, has hired five additional social workers to work with those rendered homeless by the regulations. One reason is the increased number of referrals of young people from the social work department because those young people can thereby claim exemption.

The position of those on probation is more acute. It is becoming impossible for social workers to consider discharging clients who are on probation if the effect of discharging them is to remove them from exemption and thereby render them homeless. What more absurd conclusion could there be to a period of probation, and what would be more likely to predispose them to return to a life of crime?

The Government appear to think that those who do not qualify for or secure exemption should return to the parental home. The problem with that is illustrated by the case of Brian Brown. He was not a youngster, but a man of 23. At 23, I was married and living in my own home. It is not surprising that people of that age wish to live an independent existence and do not readily accept that they should return home to mummy. In many cases, the cosy parental home waiting to welcome them back is a myth. Frequently, the background of homeless young people is broken. A stop-over hostel in Edinburgh which caters for young single homeless people calculated that 70 per cent. of its young people have lost a parent either through death or divorce.

One does need a degree in psychology to understand the tensions and resentment of some young people towards a stepfather who married their mother late in their lives. Sometimes, that is felt by the stepfather towards the children of the previous husband. That does not apply in this case, but it is well-known among social workers that one of the main reasons why young girls and women become homeless is the sexual advances or assaults of a stepfather in the house. It is grotesque to suggest that they should return to that risk in the step-parental home because the benefit has been cut. Many of them will not go.

Large numbers of young people in Scotland are now making shift by desperate expedients. One victim in Kirkcaldy took to living in a tent on the beach there. Others sleep in bus shelters. In Edinburgh, a public house serves as a clearing house between young men made homeless by the regulations and homosexual older men who offer them accommodation for a few nights in return for sexual favours. It is incredible that late in the 20th century we are abandoning vulnerable young people to such an existence.

Brian Brown did not have the skills or the psychiatric stamina to survive the circumstances. He killed himself after two nights sleeping rough in the summer. There will be other such cases when cold autumn weather sets in, unless we change the system by then. I shall suggest to the Minister a number of ways to make the system more humane. If he cannot respond to them immediately, I ask him to consider them and to write to me later.

First, if the Minister remains convinced that there is a problem of abuse, why does he not stand the system on its head, and give wider powers to the DHSS to suspend benefit where abuse is suspected, rather than suspend everybody's benefit and oblige those who are not abusing the system to prove that they qualify for exemption? That would put the onus on the DHSS to establish abuse, not on the claimant to establish that he is not abusing the system.

Secondly, the Minister should consider the change, which was made between the consultation paper and the regulations, not to provide exemption for young people living locally. That has created a great deal of difficulty. Had such an exemption existed in the case of Brian Brown, he would not have been caught by the regulations.

Thirdly, on Tuesday the Minister invited organisations working with young people to help them to claim exemption and to notify the DHSS of any cases at risk. If he is serious in inviting that assistance, the DHSS should notify such organisations of those who are likely to lose benefit and to whom notices have been sent, so that they can find out whether the young people are vulnerable and at risk and could claim exemption.

Fourthly, as a minimum will the Minister consider including in the notice to young people reducing their benefit information on where to find organisations such as citizens' advice bureaux and social work departments to obtain the advice, assistance and information that they may need to figure out whether they are exempt under the regulations?

Finally, what is so impressive about the weight of evidence that I have seen this week is that it has arisen so early in the life of the regulations, which came into force only two months ago. The first evictions began only four weeks ago, when the reduction in benefit started to bite on those caught four weeks previously. In London and Glasgow, the regulations came into effect only on Monday and the first eviction will take place this weekend. The appalling crop of cases that has been gathered so far has thus come to the surface without the metropolis even being involved. The regulations are already causing suffering to an extent of which the Minister was warned but which he did not expect when the regulations were introduced. I do not expect him to say so when he replies to this debate, but I suspect that in his heart he knows that I am right.

The Minister for Social Security (Mr. Tony Newton): First, I am extremely grateful to the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) for the careful and considered way in which he has dealt with this very difficult issue. I am only sorry that the debate takes place against the tragic background of the particular case which has led the hon. Gentleman to bring the matter to the House in this way. I therefore wish to begin by saying, as I said to the hon. Gentleman in the exchanges that we had when I made a statement on the matter last Tuesday, that I very much regret the circumstances of Mr. Brown's death and confirm the sympathy that I extended to Mr. Brown's family on Tuesday on behalf of myself and the Government.

Like the hon Gentleman, I am in some difficulty about the extent to which I can comment on that particular case today as I am advised that inquiries are taking place with a view to the possibility of holding what I believe is known in Scottish law as a fatal accident inquiry. That places constraints on what can be said in the House. I am therefore not in a position to discuss in great detail the circumstances of Mr. Brown's claim for benefit or any relationship between that claim and his death. I wish to make just one point which is slightly at variance with the hon. Gentleman's account of the benefit history and to explain exactly what the position was from the point of view of the Department early in May.

The hon. Gentleman said that Mr. Brown received a letter on 17 May. I understand that the letter was sent out by the local office on 6 May advising Mr. Brown of the changes in supplementary benefit for unemployed people aged 25 or under living as boarders. As the hon. Gentleman fairly acknowledged, the letter referred to the exemption categories. Mr. Brown did not reply to the letter and the local office therefore took no further action. When the notice ran out supplementary benefit would have ceased altogether as Mr. Brown was entitled to unemployment benefit of £28·45 which would have exceeded any supplementary benefit to which he would have been entitled apart from the board and lodging regulations. That is a simple statement of what happened at that time from the point of view of the Department.

I should emphasise—again, I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for the way in which he put this—that it seems clear that Mr. Brown would almost certainly have been exempt from the time limits had the full facts been known to the local DHSS office. Our staff can obviously only go on the information that they are given.

We have further reinforced the guidance to our offices about the importance of taking all facts into consideration as soon as they are received. We are also reinforcing the terms of the advice that we give to claimants emphasising that they should let the DHSS office know immediately if they think that they fall into an exemption category or there are other special circumstances about which we should know.

As I hope I made clear on Tuesday, that is not a request that we wish to limit to claimants only. We would welcome information on their behalf from relatives, social workers, voluntary agencies and anyone else who may have facts which our officers should know in determining the assessment of any case. Of course, I shall look further at the points on this aspect of the administration of the regulations that the hon. Gentleman raised towards the end of his speech. Next Tuesday, the House is due to debate the amending regulations which I announced last Tuesday, and I shall seek to make some further response to those points then.

Hon. Members will know of the reason for the Government proposing the changes in the regulations which came into effect on 29 April. I shall not repeat the exact figures that I gave on Tuesday about the huge increase in expenditure on board and lodging in recent years and the parallel huge increase in the number of people claiming. But I ought just to emphasise that the increase in the number of board and lodging cases, especially in the under-26 age group, has gone far beyond anything that could be explained by some of the factors sometimes adduced. During 1983, the number of claimants under 26 in board and lodging rose by 60 per cent. I do not believe that anyone could suggest that that rise was explained by any obvious change in social needs, including the unhappy problem of unemployment. As it happens, the number of unemployed claimants rose by 5 per cent. in the same year. That is so far away from the 60 per cent. increase in board and lodging cases that it is impossible to blame it on unemployment.

To a considerable extent, it is clear that significant numbers of young people were being encouraged into board and lodging accommodation by the existence of the previous DHSS benefit rules and the very large sums of money available under the previous system—up to a maximum of £110 per week in the case of one local office area—to those in board and lodging.

There is no doubt that that was accompanied by a degree of abuse and exploitation of the system, not primarily by young people themselves but by those anxious to make money out of young people by running board and lodging accommodation or moving into the sector and actively seeking to attract DHSS claimants to their establishments. The House is familiar with some of the evidence that I have given on previous occasions about that.

Mr. Frank Dobson (Holborn and St. Pancras): I recognise that there is scandalous exploitation of many young people in this way, but is not it odd to penalise them and not the scandalous profiteers? The Minister lives in my constituency. Why does he think it proper that a young person born and brought up in a council flat on the other side of Red Lion square from where he lives, who falls out with his parents and has to find board and lodging in the constituency should be driven out of the area by a law aimed at those who try to profit from his plight?

Mr. Newton: Perhaps I should make it clear that I live in my constituency but that I sleep overnight in the hon. Gentleman's constituency during the weeks when I must stay in London.

To respond to his point, the Government have always said that our aim in introducing the new board and lodging regulations was at least as much to curtail exploitation by landlords as abuse by youngsters. It is a balance which we have been trying to strike. Although I do not wish to raise the temperature of the debate, I should tell the hon. Gentleman that we have received a significant number of representations from landlords complaining about the effects of our regulations on them, although we have not received as many representations from landlords as we have from claimants. No one should believe that the regulations are directed solely at claimants whose claims we believe to be unjustified. They are directed also at preventing abuse and exploitation by landlords who were taking advantage of the previous system.

When we introduced the regulations, we took steps to protect those vulnerable youngsters who, in our view, needed to be in board and lodging accommodation for more than a short time. We produced a long list of exemption categories, including those who were recently in care, those who have children, the disabled, the mentally handicapped, those who are or have been mentally ill, and everyone who is in board and lodging accommodation as part of a programme of rehabilitation arranged by, for example, the probation service. We also exempted, for reasons that hon. Members will understand, people living in homes which qualify as hostels.

The hon. Member for Livingston fairly acknowledged that those exemption categories appear to cover many of the difficult cases that have been brought to our attention. I fully accept that that means that there is a need to ensure, at the very minimum, that the exemption categories operate effectively. That enables me to repeat the point that I made earlier in my speech. We shall welcome any help from Members of Parliament or others in ensuring that circumstances which should be taken into account are taken into account.

As I made clear to the House on Tuesday, we intend to extend the exemption categories in one case that clearly should be covered—of young people who are presently living in board and lodgings with their parents. We have already made ex gratia payments in advance of the regulations in several such cases. We have taken powers further to extend the exemption categories in cases where a clear need can be shown.

In considering what use, if any, we might make of those powers, I shall take into account the various categories of need which the hon. Gentleman has identified from his correspondence and which he raised in the debate today. I emphasise strongly to the House that the Government have taken powers to make it easier for them to respond quickly to cases where a clear need for exemption is shown.

In concluding this brief response to the hon. Gentleman, may I say that no responsible Government could have allowed the escalating cost of the previous board and lodging regime to continue unchecked, but in seeking to check it we are determined to get the balance right and to protect those who need protection. If what the hon. Gentleman has said has helped me to ensure that the balance will be maintained, I shall be even more grateful to him. I shall certainly continue to act in the spirit in which I hope I have approached this debate.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at two minutes to Three o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Terrace Pavilion

Mr. Proctor asked the Lord Privy Seal (1) what is the annual cost in each of the last two years of erecting and dismantling the House of Commons marquee on the Terrace; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what was the cost in each of the past two years up to March of repairing and refurbishing the House of Commons Terrace Pavilion, including the facilities for the two bars and the allied services following its dismantling and re-erection; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Biffen: The present awnings for both Houses were new in April 1983 and the cost of erection was included in the purchase price. Since then the Crown Suppliers have let an inclusive competitive contract to cover dismantling, storage, erection and maintenance. It is therefore not possible to quote separate costs for the two Houses, or for repair and refurbishment. The costs for both Houses' awnings, inclusive of VAT, departmental on-costs, and some engineering service costs falling on the Property Services Agency, were:

* The erection of the awning for this season was after March 1985 and has not yet been brought to account.

In addition, two extensions were provided for the Commons awnings in May 1984 at a cost of £4,669.

Northern Ireland

Mr. Clifford Forsythe asked the Lord Privy Seal how many minutes on average were spent per sitting day during the 1983-84 Session on Northern Ireland business.

Mr. Biffen: Approximately 21 minutes.

ENERGY

Power Station (Norfolk)

Mr. Orme asked the Secretary of State for Energy if, in his discussions with the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board, there have been any proposals for a new power station in Norfolk.

Mr. Goodlad: No.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

North-East Drift Net Fishery

Mr. Onslow asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has led him to conclude that the catch from the north-east drift net fishery does not represent a threat to Scottish salmon stocks.

Mr. MacGregor: My fisheries scientists, in a report published in 1982, estimated that the effect of the north east drift net fishery on the numbers of salmon caught on Scottish east coast rivers from the Tweed to the Ugie was approximately 6·4 per cent., while the effect on total salmon stocks in those rivers would have been less. Continuing work by the scientists has provided no evidence to suggest that the north east fishery represents a threat to Scottish salmon stocks.

Agricultural Wages Boards

Mr. Penhaligon asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he intends to review the operation of agricultural wages boards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland and I currently have no plans to review the operation of the agricultural wages boards.

Badgers (Tuberculosis)

Mr. Nicholls asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made in the preparation of a vaccine for badgers against tuberculosis.

Mrs. Fenner: Advances have been made in the collaborative research between workers at the central veterinary laboratory and the Middlesex hospital medical school aimed at investigating the immune response in badgers and in testing the BCG vaccine in them.

It must be emphasised, however, that there are many difficult problems yet to be overcome, both in the development of a suitable vaccine and in its use in the field.

Beef Imports

Mr. Nicholson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what quantity of beef has been imported into the United Kingdom from countries outside the European Economic Community in the last 12 months.

Mr. MacGregor: During the most recent 12-month period for which figures are available (1 May 1984 to 30 April 1985) the United Kingdom has imported some 102,000 tonnes of beef and beef products from countries outside the European Economic Community. This amount was made up as follows:

Fresh, chilled and frozen beef—35,172 tonnes.

Beef offals, processed beef and beef products—67,035 tonnes.

Source: United Kingdom Overseas Trade Statistics.

Freezer Trawlers

Mr. Spence asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Government's deliberations on the licensing of freezer trawlers for the mackerel fishery.

Mr. MacGregor: Major changes have taken place in the structure of the pelagic fishing fleet in recent years; in particular, the number of freezer trawlers has fallen from 26 in 1980 to one by the end of last year. Fisheries Ministers have therefore decided to institute, in consultation with the industry, an immediate full review of the restrictive licensing arrangements in respect of the pelagic fisheries, taking into account the current and prospective fishing opportunities.

The review will include consideration of the particular restrictions on the licensing of purse seiners and freezer trawlers announced in a written reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Cornwall South-East (Mr. Hicks) on 29 July 1980. It will be carried out in advance of the review of the restrictive licensing arrangements for pressure stocks generally which is due to take place next year. Pending the outcome of the pelagic review, the three licences for freezer trawlers new to the fishery which were issued earlier this year owing to a regrettable misunderstanding in my Deprtment will be maintained on a provisional basis. In the meantime, no further mackerel licences will be issued to freezers unless the new vessel is to replace the remaining one vessel that has been licenced to fish for mackerel before this year.

The freezer trawlers will be allocated for 1985 a mackerel quota of 3,374 tonnes per vessel, which corresponds to the average catch of purse seiners last year. The definitive management arrangements for this year's North sea herring fishery, including the question of the quotas for freezer trawlers, are still under consideration, but, pending decisions on these, the freezer trawlers will be given an initial allocation of 400 tonnes per vessel when the fishery opens on 16 June, to count against their definitive quota for 1985.

Glysophate

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Forestry Commission's application under the pesticide safety precautions scheme for the aerial application of glysophate on up to 500 hectares of land.

Mrs. Fenner: The Forestry Commission has not sought a clearance under the Pesticides Safety Precautions Scheme (PSPS) for the aerial application of glyphosate. However, an application has been made by a chemical company marketing glyphosate preparations, who were granted limited clearance under the PSPS in November 1984 for the treatment of up to 500 ha of forestry with glyphosate. The Forestry Commission will be seeking the company's agreement to use that limited clearance in order to treat commission land. It is envisaged that the treatment will take place in August/September 1985.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Molesworth (Leaflet)

Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Attorney-General (1) if he will institute proceedings against the 22 signatories of a leaflet published and first distributed at Molesworth on 22 May, a copy of which has been sent to him, and urging members of the armed forces to disobey certain orders relating to nuclear weapons, for incitement to disaffection; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if, following Mr. Peter Tatchell's remarks on Channel 4's "Comment" programme on 28 May urging members of the armed forces to think twice before obeying nuclear orders, he will institute proceedings against him for incitement to disaffection; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: As regards the leaflet distributed on 22 May 1985, the views put forward in it are of course quite unfounded in law and illustrate the confused thinking of its authors. However, I am satisfied that those to whom it is addressed are prefectly capable of appreciating it at its true worth and will treat it with derision. I therefore see no need to dignify it by making it the subject of criminal proceedings.

Similar considerations apply to the remarks made by Mr. Tatchell on the Channel 4 programme.

Magistrates' Courts

Mr. Oakes asked the Attorney-General what advice he has given to those benches of magistrates who do not publicise the names of the individual magistrates sitting as a court.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor has received representations on the withholding of the names of magistrates and, after consultations with interested parties have been completed, he will consider whether he should issue any advice to magistrates on the subject.

Mr. Oakes asked the Attorney-General if he will inquire of petty sessional divisions in England and Wales how many and which benches of magistrates refuse to publicise the names of magistrates sitting in the court.

The Attorney-General: No: I have nothing as yet to add to the answer I have today given to the hon. Member on a related topic.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

School Buildings

Dr. Michael Clark asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received alleging deteriorating conditions of school buildings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend is aware of some concern. Responsibility for the provision and maintenance of school buildings rests, however, with local education authorities and it is for them to determine their expenditure priorities within the resources available to them.

University Posts

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the number of university posts which have been created under the new blood scheme since its inception, broken down into subject area.

Sir Keith Joseph: The numbers of university posts allocated under the three year "new blood" programme, broken down by subject groups, are as follows:

Allocation of "new blood" posts by subject 1983-84 to 1985-86 (Great Britain)*

Subjects	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	Total
Medicine	43	55	32	130
Engineering/ technology	48	60	35	143
Biological sciences	25	40	23	88
Mathematics	20	27	15	62
Physical sciences	66	85	48	199
Agriculture/veterinary studies	8	11	7	26

Subjects	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	Total
Arts	15	33	18	66
Social studies, business studies and education	17	39	22	78
Total (all subjects)	242	350	200	792

* Includes posts allocated to the Open university.

Computers

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the average number of microcomputers in primary schools and secondary schools; and how many schools do not yet have a computer.

Mr. Dunn: I understand that, in the maintained sector, there are on average about 10 microcomputers per secondary school and about 1·5 micros per primary school. Only a very few maintained schools do not have a microcomputer.

Deputations

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the number of requests made by hon. and right hon. Members for deputations to see Ministers in his Department which have been refused in the past six months; which Ministers were the subject of each requested deputation; what are the names of the hon. and right hon. Members who have been refused deputations; what was the date on which the hon. Member concerned was informed that he had been refused a deputation; and what was the issue on which the deputation was requested.

Sir Keith Joseph: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Primary Schools

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will list in the Official Report the number of primary schools in each local education authority which are smaller than the minimum sizes discussed in paragraph 275 of the White Paper "Better Schools", Cmnd. 9469 and what proportion of primary schools this represents in each case, at the latest date for which figures are available; and what information his Department has as to the numbers of such schools currently subject to proposals for reorganisation.

Mr. Dunn: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Comprehensive Schools

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will list in the Official Report the number of comprehensive schools in each local education authority which are smaller than the minimum sizes discussed in paragraph 275 of the White Paper, "Better Schools," Cmnd. 9469, in respect of (a) the number of forms entry, (b) the size of the sixth form and (c) both the above respects; what proportion of secondary schools this represents in each case; and what information is available to his Department as to the number of such schools currently subject to proposals for reorganisation in each case at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Dunn: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Grammar Schools

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on the guidance issued by his Department in respect of the minimum size of grammar schools in terms of (a) the number of forms entry, (b) the size of the sixth form in the light of paragraph 275 of the White Paper, "Better Schools," Cmnd. 9469, (c) the number of such schools in each local education authority retaining selection which are smaller than the guidance in one or both respects and (d) the number of such schools currently subject to proposals for reorganisation.

Mr. Dunn: The Department has issued no guidance on the minimum size of grammar schools. The principles for future guidance proposed in paragraph 275 of the White Paper, Better Schools, Cmnd 9469 related to primary schools and comprehensive schools.

Educational Maintenance Allowance

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what would be the cost of providing an educational maintenance allowance of £27 per week, 52 weeks a year to all those aged 16 to 19 years in full-time education in England, including those in further education colleges and taking into account savings in child benefit and existing educational maintenance allowance.

Sir Keith Joseph: About £965 million for England only.

Student Grants

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what would be the cost of restoring all student grants to their October 1978 value;

(2) what is the average level of mandatory student grant paid to mature students, single mature students, married mature students, and married mature students with children; and how many mature students there are in each category;

(3) if he will estimate the additional cost of awarding all students in higher education a full maintenance grant in each of the categories (a) 18 years plus, (b) 19 years plus, (c) 20 years plus and (d) 21 years plus in 1984-85 and in 1985-86;

(4) what would be the cost in 1985-86 of restoring mandatory student grants to the real value of the 1978-79 award.

Sir Keith Joseph: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

PRIME MINISTER

Confectionery Industry (Ministerial Responsibility)

Mr. Gregory asked the Prime Minister if she will list the matters relating to the United Kingdom confectionery industry on which (a) the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and (b) the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, respectively, answer parliamentary questions.

The Prime Minister: In general the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food is responsible for the sponsorship of the confectionery industry, including product labelling and compositional standards, but specific matters such as consumer protection and overseas trade are matters for the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

A general guide to Departmental responsibilities is contained in The Civil Service Year Book 1985, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Bradford Disaster Appeal Fund

Mr. Madden asked the Prime Minister, if she will make it the policy of Her Majesty's Government to increase its contribution to the Bradford disaster appeal fund by an amount equivalent to the estimated value-added tax revenue received from the sales of the gramophone record produced in support of the fund; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No. The Government have made a special payment of £250,000 to the Bradford disaster appeal fund, which we believe to be an appropriate response to help the victims of that appalling tragedy.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Civil Defence

23. Mr. Grist asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is satisfied with the co-operation with his Department by Welsh local authorities in mounting civil defence training operations.

Mr. Giles Shaw: A number of local authorities in both England and Wales need to do more to fulfil their obligations, including training, under the 1983 regulations. Nevertheless practically all the Welsh authorities sent people to the Civil Defence college last year and also undertook some civil defence training themselves.

Life Sentence Prisoners

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of prisons in the United Kingdom which are used as training prisons for inmates serving life sentences; and if he will list the prisons concerned.

Mr. Mellor: Excluding local prisons and remand centres which initially accommodate life sentence prisoners, 44 prison service establishments now accommodate life sentence prisoners. The 29 adult male establishments are as follows:

(a) Eight category B dispersal prisons—
(prisoners who have been placed in security category A are accommodated in these prisons):
- Albany
- Frankland
- Gartree
- Hull
- Long Lartin
- Parkhurst
- Wakefield
- Wormwood Scrubs

(b) Nine other category B establishments:
- Blundeston
- Bristol
- Coldingley
- Dartmoor
- Grendon (also takes male young offenders—see below)
- Kingston
- Lewes
- Nottingham
- Maidstone

(c) Eight category C establishments:
- Acklington
- Featherstone
- Haverigg
- Lancaster
- Norwich
- Preston
- The Verne
- Wayland

(d) Four category D establishments:
- Ashwell
- Ford
- Leyhill
- Sudbury

The six establishments holding females and the ten establishments holding young male offenders are not categorised but are as follows:

(a) Six female establishments:
- Askham Grange
- Bullwood Hall
- Cookham Wood
- Durham
- Holloway
- Styal

(b) Ten young offender establishments:
- Aylesbury
- Chelmsford
- Exeter
- Finnamore Wood
- Grendon (also takes adult males)
- Liverpool
- Lowdham Grange
- Northallerton
- Rochester
- Swinfen Hall

Two further category C establishments for adult males, Stocken and Channings Wood, are expected to receive life sentence prisoners in the autumn. It is also planned to accommodate young male lifers in Castington which is a youth custody centre at present under construction.

Italians (Extradition)

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Italians living in Britain are wanted in Italy for terrorist offences; and whether extradition proceedings have been initiated in any cases.

Mr. Brittan: The available information relates to formal extradition requests and to requests for police assistance in tracing and arresting persons alleged to have been involved in terrorist offences. In recent years two persons accused of terrorist-related offences have been extradited to Italy. In 1981 the Italian authorities sought the extradition of seven Italian nationals accused of terrorist offences, but the cases were discharged by the Bow street magistrate because of insufficient evidence.

I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that all but one of the group remained in this country. The commissioner also tells me that the Italian authorities are seeking the arrest of three further Italian nationals in connection with terrorist crime but that it appears that their alleged offences are not extraditable. Extradition proceedings are also currently in progress in respect of one person accused of such an offence.

Concessionary Television Licences

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from Bradford metropolitan council during the last year concerning the issuing of free television licences to all households consisting solely of pensioners; what action he has taken as a result; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Of the three letters received from Bradford metropolitan council in the last year or so on the subject of concessionary television licences, one concerned the issue of free licences to all households consisting solely of pensioners, paid for out of taxation. We have replied explaining that in the Government's view the cost of free licences for all households comprising only pensioners, which we estimate would be about £225 million a year, could not reasonably be added to public expenditure.

Firearms Act 1968

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department which chief constables have adapted their procedures to conform with the recommendations of his recent working party's report on the administration of the Firearms Act 1968.

Mr. Giles Shaw: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is aware of any chief officer of police who has failed or refuses to comply with the Firearms Act 1968.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has yet reviewed the effect of the standard territorial conditions for use in the case of firearm certificate holders with access to a number of different locations for the use of weapons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No. I would refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to his question on 5 June at column 159.

Computer Fraud

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he plans to seek further changes in the law to deter computer fraud and the expansion of crime based on the manipulation of electronic equipment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We are keeping a watch on developments in this field to see whether changes in the law may be needed. We shall also look carefully at the findings of the Roskill committee which the Lord Chancellor and the Home Secretary appointed to consider the law and procedure in the conduct of criminal proceedings arising from fraud. Recognising the importance of the international dimension, the Government are represented on an Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development working party studying computer-related criminality.

Coal Industry Dispute (Police Costs)

Sir Hugh Rossi asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the Metropolitan Police Commissioner's policy on recompensing police officers who earned overtime while serving outside the Metropolitan police area during the coal industry dispute.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Under the Police Regulations 1979 overtime is recompensed either by payment at the appropriate rate or by time off in lieu, at the officer's discretion, but if an officer elects the latter and cannot take time off within three months, he must be paid overtime.

The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis adheres to these regulations.

Metropolitan Police (Manning Levels)

Sir Hugh Rossi asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Metropolitan Police Commissioner on the actual manning levels in the four police stations in the Hornsey and Wood Green constituency since 1 May and for the comparable period in 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that the total number of police officers assigned to each of the four police stations was as follows:

Hornsey and Wood Green constituency:
Total Police strength by Police Station (Uniform and CID)

	Wood Green	Highgate	Muswell Hill	Hornsey	Totals
1984
29 April	127	28	39	110	304
6 May	126	28	39	110	303
13 May	126	28	39	113	306
20 May	126	28	39	113	306
27 May	126	28	39	111	304
3 June	126	28	39	111	304
1985
28 April	129	24	34	125	312

12 May	128	24	34	125	311
19 May	127	24	34	125	310
26 May	127	24	34	125	310
2 June	127	24	35	124	310

Note: These figures take no account of temporary absences due to sickness, leave, training, rest days, mutual aid etc.

Television Licences (Refunds)

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what circumstances refunds on the payment of television licences are payable; and if he will reconsider the criteria applicable in such cases.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Refunds of television licence fees are generally available:

(a) when a licence ceases to be needed within the first 28 days of its validity; or

(b) when two licences are taken out but one was obtained in error; or

(c) when an unexpired monochrome licence is surrendered on issue of a colour licence.

We have no present plans to change these arrangements.

Video Works (Classification Authority)

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will lay before Parliament his proposals for the designation of persons to act as the authority responsible for making arrangements for the classification of video works under the Video Recordings Act 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brittan [pursuant to his reply, 11 June, 1985, c. 389-90]: I have today laid before both Houses of Parliament revised proposals for the designation under section 4(1) of the Video Recordings Act 1984 of those persons who on designation will be the authority responsible for the matters set out in that section of the Act. I now propose to designate the Earl of Harewood, the Lord Birkett, and Miss Monica Sims, respectively the president and vice-presidents of the British Board of Film Classification (formerly the British Board of Film Censors).

WALES

Foreign Investment

8. Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the amount of foreign investment in Wales and the number of jobs attributable to it since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Inward investment projects in receipt of selective financial assistance since May 1979 amount in value to nearly £750 million. These projects promise about 15,000 new and 8,000 safeguarded jobs. Competition for inward investment is keener than ever but the success achieved over the past two years indicates that Wales has a great deal to offer international companies.

Labour Statistics

14. Mr. Gwilym Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what were the numbers of those in employment and available for employment in (a) Cardiff, North and *(b)*Wales in 1979, 1983 and at the latest convenient date.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The full information requested is not available. I shall write to my hon. Friend about the figures for the Cardiff area. For Wales the total in employment, including the self-employed, in June 1979, 1983 and 1984 were 1,133,000, 1,019,000, and 1,043,000 respectively. For the same dates, the numbers of unemployed claimants were 73,500, 162,160, and 162,941 and for May 1985, 178,467.

Education

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Wales which local authorities retain a selective secondary school system.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: None. Although two areas of Dyfed are not yet reorganised on comprehensive lines.

Combined Heat and Power

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to promote combined heat and power projects in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Combined heat and power is covered in the Government's promotion of the efficient use of energy and is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy. I therefore do not have any plans to promote the subject.

Courtaulds (Greenfield Site)

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Wales what notification he has received from Courtaulds in respect of capital equipment purchased with Government grants for use at the Greenfield site during the past four years and due for disposal on the closure of the plant.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Full details of assets on which regional development grants have been paid were supplied, as required by the conditions of the grants, in the course of a meeting with officials of Courtaulds at the company's Greenfield premises on 8 May 1985.

Early Potatoes

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any further plans to help early potato growers in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I am closely monitoring developments in the early potato sector to ensure that there is no unfair competition resulting from breaches of European Community obligations.

Afforestation

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many applications for afforestation in Wales under the forestry grant scheme were received by the Forestry Commission in each year since 1981; how many of these received approval for grant aid; and how many were the subject of a site visit by Forestry Commission staff before approval was given.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: The numbers of applications received for grant aid for new planting and restocking in Wales, from the start of the forestry grant scheme on 1 October 1981, are as follows:

	Number
Six months to 31 March 1982	104
Year to 31 March 1983	140
Year to 31 March 1984	155
Year to 31 March 1985	171
Total	570

Of these, 464 applications were approved, 30 were refused or withdrawn, and 76 were still under consideration at 31 March 1985.

It is the Forestry Commission's practice to inspect the area concerned before approving any application for entry to the forestry grant scheme.

TRANSPORT

Estuarial Crossings (Tolls)

Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he now has any proposals to change the position whereby certain estuarial crossings are tolled and others are not.

Mrs. Chalker: No, the position remains as my right hon. Friend explained to the hon. Member on 14 February 1984 at column 113.

Common Transport Policy

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the judgment of the European Court in favour of the European Parliament against the Council of Ministers for their failure to agree and implement a common transport policy.

Mr. Ridley: The European Court of Justice delivered its judgment in the case brought by the European Parliament for failure to implement a common transport policy on 22 May. The court ruled that the council had failed, in violation of the treaty, to assure the free provision of services in the field of international transport and to fix the conditions of admission of non-resident carriers to national transport in a member state. The judgment deals only with inland transport but the same arguments are applicable to shipping and aviation.

I welcome the judgment. The Government have consistently pressed for the removal of restrictions on the free provision of transport services in the Community. The judgment supports our case. I hope that it will spur the Council to make more rapid progress towards this goal and that the Transport Council on 24 June can agree a programme of work which will lead to the early implementation of the court's ruling.

Marine Rescue Services

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport what provision there is for marine rescue between Northern Ireland and the Isle of Man; and if he will make a statement on the future of the marine rescue sub-centre at Ramsey, Isle of Man.

Mr. Ridley: Her Majesty's Coastguard has maritime rescue sub-centres at Belfast and Ramsey providing 24-hour coverage of, and co-ordinating capability for, marine search and rescue incidents which occur in the sea area between Northern Ireland and the Isle of Man. Declared rescue facilities are provided by RNLI lifeboats at Donaghadee and Newcastle in Northern Ireland and at Port Erin and Port St. Mary on the Isle of Man, with rescue helicopters of the Royal Navy at Prestwick in Scotland and the Royal Air Force at Valley, North Wales. There are no plans to change these arrangements.

Merchant Ships

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the new tonnage of merchant ships ordered for the United Kingdom fleet in 1984; and how much of that tonnage was placed in United Kingdom yards.

Mr. David Mitchell: The tonnage, in gross registered tons of merchant vessels of 100 grt and over, ordered in 1984 for United Kingdom registration was 183 thousand tons, of which 117 thousand tons was placed in United Kingdom yards.

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of total world merchant ship tonnage is currently represented by the United Kingdom fleet: and what was the equivalent figure for 1965 and 1975, respectively.

Mr. David Mitchell: At 1 January 1985, the latest period for which world fleet statistics are available, United Kingdom registered merchant vessels represented 3·0 per cent. of the world total deadweight tonnage of merchant ships of 100 gross tons and over. The corresponding figures for mid-1975 and mid-1965 are 9·7 per cent. and 12·6 per cent. respectively.

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the latest figures for the size of the United Kingdom merchant fleet, measured both in the numbers of ships and in dead-weight tonnage; and what were the equivalent figures for 1965 and 1975, respectively.

Mr. David Mitchell: At end March 1985, the latest period for which figures are available, the United Kingdom-registered merchant fleet of vessels of 500 gross tons and over consisted of 758 ships with a total of 21·1 million deadweight tons. This compares with 1,770 ships of 50·7 million dwt at end March 1975 and 2,461 ships of 26·7 million dwt at end March 1965.

Merchant Fleet (Overseas Earnings)

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the current contribution of British shipping to the United Kingdom balance of payments; and how this compares with the equivalent figures in 1965 and 1975, respectively, measured in 1985 values.

Mr. David Mitchell: The net contribution of the United Kingdom shipping industry to the sea transport account of the United Kingdom balance of payments is provisionally estimated to be £547 million in 1984. The table shows the equivalent figures for 1965 and 1975 both at current prices and at constant 1980 prices. The 1980 price figures have been calculated using published constant 1980 price indices as a basis. Constant price estimates are complicated to construct and 1985 price figures are not available. Care is required in any interpretation of a net balance expressed at constant prices.

Net contribution of the United Kingdom shipping industry to the balance of payments sea transport account

	1965	1975	1984
Current prices	130	539	547
Constant 1980 prices	89	1,128	591

Vehicles (Regulations)

Mr. Fox asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list divisions within his Department responsible for matters relating to the detailed enforcement of the following regulations: (a) the Road Vehicles Lighting Regulations 1984, regulations 1-19 with appropriate schedules, (b) the Motor Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1978, as amended, regulations 1-79 with appropriate schedules, and in particular regulations 31 and 31 a-e, (c) the Motor Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1978, as amended, regulations 116b.

Mrs. Chalker: My Department's vehicle standards and engineering division is responsible for the preparation of the regulations listed. New vehicles are, however, approved with regard to their construction by my Department's vehicle inspectorate or the vehicle and component approval division, whilst vehicles already in use on the road are subject to roadside inspections and spot checks by the vehicle inspectorate. The detailed day-to-day enforcement of these regulations is the responsibility of individual chief officers of police.

EMPLOYMENT

Factory Inspectorate

Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he is satisfied with the numbers employed by Her Majesty's Factory Inspectorate and the efficiency of their operations.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Her Majesty's factory Inspectorate has sufficient staff to perform its essential functions. Efforts have been and are continuing to be made further to improve the efficiency of the inspectorate's operations.

Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of prosecutions made by Her Majesty's Factory Inspectorate between 1979 and 1985 and the average cost or penalty imposed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The numbers of prosecutions made by Her Majesty's Factory Inspectorate between 1979 and 1985 and the average penalties imposed are as follows:

Year	Prosecutions	Average penalty £
1979	1,227	181
1980	1,297	179
1981	1,142	206
1982	1,350	344
1983	1,470	265
1984	1,300	332

1985 figures are not yet available.

Merchant Fleet

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest figure for employment in the United Kingdom merchant fleet; and how this compares with the equivalent figure in 1965 and 1975, respectively.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following table gives, for the dates specified, the estimated number of employees in employment in the sea transport industry in the United Kingdom. The Department's employment statistics are analysed according to the standard industrial classification (SIC) which does not identify the merchant fleet as such. The figures for June 1965 are for minimum list heading 705 of the 1968 SIC and those for December 1984 are for class 74 of the 1980 SIC. The date for June 1975 is given on both bases.

Sea transport—United Kingdom

	Number of employees
1968 SIC—minimum list heading 705
June 1965	115,000
June 1975	88,000
1980 SIC—Class 74
June 1975	86,000
December 1984	38,000

International Labour Organisation

Mr. Prescott asked the Secretary of State for Employment, in respect of which conventions of the International Labour Organisation to which the United Kingdom is a signatory, the United Kingdom's compliance has been the subject of comment by the International Labour Organisation committee of experts; what were those comments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The International Labour conventions in respect of which the United Kingdom's compliance has been the subject of comment by the committee of experts in its latest report are as follows:

Convention 26: Minimum Wage Fixing Machinery.
Convention 87: Freedom of Association and the Right to Organise.
Convention 122: Employment Policy.
Convention 144: Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards).
Convention 151: Labour Relations (Public Service).

Some of the comments of the committee of experts are long and detailed, and I will write to the hon. Member and arrange for a copy of my letter to be placed in the Library.

The report of the committee of experts is currently being examined by the conference committee on the application of conventions and recommendations at the 71st session of the IL conference in Geneva, and I understand there may be discussion of some of the comments relating to the United Kingdom.

Skillcentres

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will consider making more resources available for training for mechanical and electrical engineers at skillcentres.

Mr. Peter Morrison: In order to make the best use of taxpayers' money training provision in particular skills is closely tailored to the needs of local labour markets. When evidence exists of changes in demand resources can be transferred into training in the skills required. If the hon. Member has any particular evidence in mind I would be pleased if he will write to me.

Travel-to-Work Areas

Mr. Maclean asked the Secretary of State for Employment, with regard to travel-to-work areas, what was the value emerging from the calculations of the measure commuting links formula for Silloth and Waver wards combined and (a) the Workington travel-to-work area and (b) the Carlisle travel-to-work area, excluding Silloth and Waver.

Mr. Alan Clark: The commuting links requested are as follows:

(a) Silloth and Waver wards with the Workington travel-to-work area: 0·0016

(b) Silloth and Waver wards with the rest of the Carlisle travel-to-work area: 0·0038.

Mr. Maclean asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether, pursuant to his answer of 30 April, Official Report, column 107, regarding calculations of measure commuting links for travel to work areas he will set out parts (d) and (e) of that answer the factors Fab, Fba, Wa, Wb, Ra, and Rb as defined in Appendix 2 of the supplement to the September 1984 edition of Employment Gazette.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information requested is given in the following table.

	Waver with Wampool and Wigton	Waver with Aspatria and Ellen
Fab	10	0
Fba	10	10
Wa	970	970
Wb	1,150	1,290
Ra	790	790
Rb	3,450	1,640

Job Release Scheme

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether the job release scheme for the disabled between 60 and 64 years will continue beyond 31 July.

Mr. Alan Clark: Yes. As my right hon. Friend announced on 12 November 1984, at column 445, both the full-time and part-time job release schemes will continue until 31 March 1986 with no further change in the ages of eligibility for both able-bodied men and women and disabled men.

Disabled Persons

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Employment, in the light of the recommendation by the Manpower Services Commission report on the quota scheme that further research should be carried out, what initiative the Government will take; and if he will make a statement on the other recommendations of the report.

Mr. Alan Clark [pursuant to his reply, 14 June 1985, c. 583-84]: As I said in my oral answer to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) on 11 June at column 742, I am currently considering the advice and recommendations contained in the Manpower Services Commission's report on the quota scheme. I shall report the Government's conclusions to the House in due course.

ENVIRONMENT

Right-to-Buy Legislation

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if consideration has been given to amending the right-to-buy legislation in order to enable individuals in essential services with tied accommodation to receive assistance to purchase in the open market, as in the case of tenants of charitable housing associations; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Various possibilities along these lines have been and are being examined. But the scheme to assist tenants of charitable housing associations arose out of special circumstances which do not apply in the case of tied accommodation and there are of course other categories of tenants who are excluded from the right to buy.

Non-combustibility Levels.

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what evidence he has as to the reproduceability and repeatability of the new BS476 part II test for defining the alternative levels of non-combustibility under the draft approved documents relating to the Building Act 1984.

Sir George Young: On the basis of tests carried out by a number of laboratories the British Standards Institution committee was satisfied that the level of reproductability and reoperability was satisfactory. The fire research station is satisfied that in this repect the part II test is as good as if not better than the existing part 4 test.

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is satisfied with the data available to him to set the criteria for defining the alternative levels of non-combustibility under the draft approved documents relating to the Building Act 1984.

Sir George Young: Evidence from actual fires and from tests undertaken by the fire research station indicates that the use of non-combustible materials with less than 0·5 mm combustible facing will not, in the circumstances specified in the approved documents, increase the risk to the safety of the occupants of buildings. Such use is already permitted in Scotland and in inner London.

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what evidence he has of the effect of his proposal under the approved documents relating to the Building Act 1984 to allow composite materials with less than 0·5 mm of combustible facing each side to go untested by allowing the requirements for non combustibility to be limited to the core of such materials, on safety standards.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friend is satisfied that the test data presented by the fire research station to the British Standards committee responsible for fire tests is adequate for defining the alternative levels of performance under the part II test for the purposes of the building regulations.

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what evidence he has to the effect on standards of life safety of the changes to the non-combustibility requirements embodied in the approved documents with respect to the Building Act 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The evidence from existing use, investigation of actual fires and from tests indicates that the proposed changes will not affect life safety standards.

Empty Dwellings

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what policy initiatives he proposes to promote a reduction in the current level of vacancies in the private housing sector; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The Government want to encourage private owners to let empty property. As my right hon. Friend said in reply to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 12 June, it is hoped to introduce legislation to encourage the supply of more private sector homes to rent but probably not during the lifetime of this Parliament. Meanwhile, I hope that the owners of empty property will recognise the advantages of letting it rather than leaving it empty, and that they will not overlook the possibility of using shorthold.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposes, in the light of the findings of his Department's recent report "Local Authority Empty Dwellings" (a) to reduce the vacancy level of 6·9 per cent. in Government-owned and managed housing and (b) to seek to reduce the vacancy level of 2·3 per cent. in local authority dwellings.

Sir George Young: My Department will shortly issue a circular to local authorities setting out ways in which better management can help to reduce numbers of empty dwellings. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has also restored eligibility for housing association grant (Mini-HAG) to local authority short-life dwellings.

The circular will be sent to Government Departments and a range of other public sector bodies (to whom as a group the figure of 6·9 per cent. relates) to emphasise once again the need to ensure that vacant housing stock is put back into use or sold at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in the light of paragraph 6.2 of his Department's recent report "Local Authority Empty Dwellings" he will introduce legislation to impose upon all local authorities the obligation to place applicants accepted as homeless in accommodation of no lower a standard than that provided for other applicants; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friend has no plans to introduce such legislation. It is for local authorities to decide how to fulfil their obligations towards people for whom they have accepted responsibility under the Housing (Homeless Persons) Act 1977. As my Department's code of guidance makes clear, the possibilities include the use of their own stock or housing association of private sector property, but authorities are asked to avoid obliging homeless people to spend a certain period in interim accommodation as a matter of policy, and are advised to bear in mind relevant provisions of general housing and public health legislation.

Housing (London)

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether it is the policy of his Department to maintain a Londonwide renovation team responsible for the renovation of former Greater London council properties which have been transferred to the London boroughs for which properties the Greater London council maintains a residual responsibility.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether he has ascertained how many London boroughs would wish, in the event of the Greater London council being abolished, to see Greater London council staff engaged on the programme to renovate former Greater London council housing transferred to the London residuary body and in what circumstances those boroughs would wish to see the staff retained in that body;

(2) in what circumstances Greater London council staff engaged on the programme to renovate former Greater London council housing transferred to the London boroughs would pass to the London residuary body, in the event of the Greater London council being abolished;

(3) what range of staff he envisages will pass to the London residuary body to support programmes related to renovation of former Greater London council housing transferred to the London boroughs, in the event of the Greater London council being abolished.

Sir George Young: My noble Friend will be moving an amendment in another place to the Local Government Bill which will provide for the London residuary body to take a positive role in seeking the views of the boroughs on whether the residuary body should take on specialist teams temporarily while long term arrangements are being finalised. This would apply to renovations teams.

General Improvement Grants

Mr. Arnold asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government on the future funding of general improvement grants.

Sir George Young: I refer my hon. Friend to paragraphs 76-79 of the Green Paper "Home Improvement —A New Approach" (Cmnd. 9513), which set out the Government's proposals for providing local authorities with resources and Exchequer support for home improvement grants.

Nuclear Installations (North-West)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list and describe the steps taken by his Department pursuant to recommendation 10 of the report of the advisory group chaired by Sir Douglas Black on the incidence of cancers in the vicinity of nuclear installations in the north-west of England.

Mr. Waldegrave: In this field my Department acts jointly with the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. Discussions have continued about new authorisations for discharges from BNFL Sellafield, and there will be formal consultation with the National Radiological Protection Board and the Department of Health and Social Security about the drafts of these authorisations. The new authorisation for liquid discharges is planned to come into operation before the end of the year. As announced by my right hon. Friend on 18 December, the authorisations will subsequently be reviewed every three years.

The membership of the independent Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee has been extended to include medical experts. DHSS is now represented on relevant official committees. My Department, the MAFF and the DHSS are currently considering the most appropriate form of further action to implement paragraph d. of recommendation 10.

STOLport (London Docklands)

Mr. Barnett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how he proposes to limit the types of aircraft taking off and landing at the proposed STOLport facility.

Mr. Macfarlane: The types of aircraft permitted to use STOLport were defined in the conditions attached to my right hon. Friends' decision on 23 May 1985 giving planning permission for the STOLport. The enforcement of those conditions will, as is normal, fall to the local planning authority.

Maltby Far and Low Common

Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether any deed in respect of Maltby Far and Low Common has been deposited with him under subsection 2 of section 193 of the Law of Property Act 1925; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. Under section 193(1) of the Law of Property Act 1925 the public have a legal right of access, for air and exercise, to the areas of common land at Maltby Far and Low Commons, by virtue of their location in an urban district on 1 January 1926. In these circumstances it would not be appropriate for a deed to be deposited under subsection (2).

Urban Aid (Bradford)

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will reconsider urgently the urban aid allocation to Bradford to meet revenue expenditure; what representations he has received from Bradford metropolitan council and Bradford voluntary agencies about the service implications of the urban aid allocation being reduced; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: I have received a letter from city councillors and the Council for Voluntary Service. I do not propose to alter the allocation, which is the same in cash as last year. While it allows slightly less for revenue it allows more for capital expenditure.

Right to Buy (Southwark Council)

Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the reasons for the delay by Southwark council in proceeding with the application of Mrs. and Mrs. L. Downing of 17 Hillsborough Road to buy their council house; and when he now expects the transaction to be completed.

Sir George Young: I understand that Mr. and Mrs. Downing's right to buy application was delayed principally by Southwark council's failure, as yet, to produce a standard from of transfer for leasehold houses. I expect Mr. and Mrs. Downing to receive legal documentation by the end of June and for completion to take place within a month thereafter. I regret the delays caused by Southwark council.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to make a special development order for the geological examination of the site at Elstow in Bedfordshire and any additional sites proposed by the Nuclear Industry Radioactive Waste Executive for the disposal of intermediate level radioactive waste.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend expects to be able to do so in the autumn in respect of sites for a facility for shorter-lived wastes, after NIREX has announced the additional sites to Elstow, and my Department has undertaken appropriate consultations about the drafting of the order.

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give an indication of the likely date of the announcement of sites identified by the Nuclear Industry Radioactive Waste Executive for the potential disposal below ground of intermediate level radioactive waste; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: For a deep underground facility, NIREX has been asked to search for at least three alternative sites, but it is not possible to say at this stage when it will be in a position to make an announcement.

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when he now expects the investigation currently being carried out by his Department into the best practicable environmental options for nuclear waste management to be completed;

(2) when the investigation currently being carried out by his Department into the best practicable environmental options for nuclear waste management is due to be completed.

Mr. Waldegrave: I expect the study of the best practicable environmental options to be duly completed by the end of the year.

Rate Limitation

Mrs. Currie asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the level of spending below which local authorities will be exempt from selective rate limitations for 1986-87.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: I have today laid before the House an order which uprates the £10 million exclusion in section 2(2)(a) of the Rates Act 1984 to £10·6 million.

Any local authority in England budgeting to spend below this level this year cannot be considered for selection for rate limitation in 1986-87. Copies of the order are being sent to the local authority associations.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales has already laid a similar order for Welsh local authorities.

NHBC Repair Scheme

Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is now in a position to specify when the first approvals for repairs will be given under the National Housing Building Council scheme for prefabricated reinforced concrete houses; when he expects the first repairs to be completed; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: I will answer this question shortly.

Urban Programme

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money has been allocated for the urban programme holiday project for 1985; what expenditure has been agreed in Yorkshire and Humberside; and how both programmes compare with equivalent expenditure in 1984.

Sir George Young: I will answer this question shortly.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Aid and Trade

Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the proportion of United Kingdom produced materials used in the projects supported through the overseas project fund in each year since 1979.

Mr. Channon: The information requested is not available for the period up to September 1981, when the new guidelines for operation of the overseas projects fund took effect. Since then the proportion by value of United Kingdom goods and services used in the contracts awarded to United Kingdom companies, which received offers from the Fund, was as follows:

Financial year of contract award	Percentage by value of United Kingdom goods and services
1981-82*	47
1982-83	39
1983-84	79
1984-85	75

* Six months from October.

Typically, local content has predominantly accounted for the balance of the content values. The increased percentage of United Kingdom content in the latter years reflects the more stringent criteria applied to OPF offers made since September 1981.

Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the projects that United Kingdom companies have undertaken with support from the overseas projects fund in each year since 1979.

Mr. Channon: For reasons of commercial confidentiality, it is not the practice to disclose particulars of individual cases which have been offered support from the overseas projects fund.

In each of the financial years from 1979-80, the number of projects awarded to United Kingdom companies with support from the Overseas Projects Fund has been as follows:

	Number
1979-80	5
1980-81	21
1981-82	23
1982-83	6
1983-84	5
1984-85	2

Export Controls

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he intends to take any action following the remarks of the Lord Chief Justice in relation to the Export of Goods Control Order 1981, made during an Appeal Court hearing on 10 May; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: No.

COCOM Regulations

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has received a copy of the United States Export Regulations (COCOM) of 29 April.

Mr. Channon: Yes. A notice setting out the amendments to export controls on software and electronic computers appeared in the United States federal register of 26 April.

United States (Technology Restrictions)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from the EEC Commission and what information he has supplied to the Commission regarding restrictions placed by the United States Government on access to scientific, trade, technical and academic conferences in the United States of America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Elmet (Mr. Batiste) on 23 and 31 January at columns 425 and 260 respectively.

US (Export Controls)

Mr. Faulds asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has received any information as to whether changes in the United States' security export control procedures have resulted in difficulties being encountered by United Kingdom companies in obtaining electronic equipment or components from that country.

Mr. Channon: While we support the underlying purpose of United States security export controls, the procedures associated with them can be time consuming and a source of occasional difficulty for United Kingdom companies which rely on supplies of electronic equipment or components fom the United States. But I have no information which suggests that these problems have been made worse by recent changes in the US regulations.

Electrical Appliances (Fitted Plugs)

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from the Association of Manufacturers of Domestic Electrical Appliances concerning the demand for plugs to be fitted to appliances before sale; what conclusion he has reached; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: I have not received any direct representations from the Association of Manufacturers of Domestic Electrical Appliances (AMDEA) about the fitting of plugs to appliances before sale. I have, however, seen a copy of a letter from AMDEA to the director of environmental health of Newport borough council. AMDEA explained in this letter that there were still manufacturing problems with the fitting of plugs to appliances and that a totally reliable plug was needed for use in mass production assembly techniques before these problems could be overcome.

It has been suggested to me from time to time that the safety of consumers would be improved if domestic appliances had 13 amp plugs fitted to them before sale to the public. However, I do not think that the time for introducing legislation to make this mandatory because some 15 per cent. of households in the United Kingdom still have electrical supply systems which do not take 13 amp (square pin) plugs.

Hotels and Guest Houses (Grants)

Mr. Gale asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to approve proposals from the English tourist board to take further account of the needs of the smaller hotels and guest houses and to modify the section 4 grant scheme.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The English Tourist Board is currently considering a number of modifications to its procedures for administering the section 4 scheme which would be relevant to the needs of smaller hotels and guesthouses, and it hopes to introduce new arrangements shortly.

Telephone Sales Promotion

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he has received any representations from the public about companies selling goods or services over the telephone; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has been notified by companies or organisations engaged in telephone sales promotion of their intention to achieve self regulation by adopting a code of conduct; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: I receive a number of complaints from the public about companies selling goods and services over the telephone.

I have received no approaches on this matter from companies or organisations engaged in telephone sales promotion. However, following his report on "Selling by Telephone" which was published in October 1984, the Director General of Fair Trading is encouraging the adoption of new guidelines by all firms responsible for initiating or making unsolicited telephone approaches to consumers. I endorse this self-regulatory approach.

Frozen Food

Mr. John Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the value and tonnage of quick frozen food exports and imports, respectively, to and from other European Economic Community countries during each of the past five years.

Mr. Channon: Total quick frozen food products are not readily identifiable in the Overseas Trade Statistics. Such information as is identifiable for particular types of frozen food is given in the tables.

Scott Lithgow Ltd.

Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the completion accounts relating to the sale of Scott Lithgow Ltd. to Trafalgar House plc in March 1984.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The auditors respectively of British Shipbuilders and Trafalgar House have been unable to reach agreement on these accounts. Under the terms of the sale, therefore, the issues in dispute will be referred to an independent expert for determination. Meanwhile, British Shipbuilders has agreed to make a payment in respect of issues not in dispute, principally the cost of completing an oil rig for BP, which was partly completed at the time of sale. Pending Parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, this payment will be funded through a repayable advance from the Contingencies Fund.

British Overseas Trade Board

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry for what reasons the support of the British Overseas Trade Board was withdrawn from British companies exhibiting at the 1985 autumn fair at Frankfurt; how many companies were promised support; what was the anticipated cost of the support; how much notice of withdrawal was given; and how many complaints have been received by his Department or the British Overseas Trade Board.

Mr. Channon [pursuant to his reply, 12 June 1985, c. 462]: Where British Overseas Trade Board (BOTB) support has not been offered to British exporters exhibiting at the 1985 Frankfurt Autumn Fair this is because the BOTB has considered that other overseas exhibitions better meet the objectives of its support by providing the more effective return to the British economy.

The trade associations and other bodies which sponsor BOTB groups at overseas exhibitions were aware that the BOTB's programme of support would be reduced this year; a copy of the BOTB's consultation document—available in the Library — was sent to them on 3 December 1984. No offers of support were made and then withdrawn as a result of the reduction in the programme.

The net cost to the BOTB of support at the 1984 Frankfurt Autumn Fair was £54,000; this could have been expected to be of the order of £52,000 in 1985.

Trade associations and other sponsoring bodies were advised of the BOTB's view about which exhibitions they considered it likely they could include in the programme of support by a BOTB letter dated 17 April. Fourteen letters have been received about the BOTB's decision on this exhibition. Trade associations and others were also informed on 17 April that BOTB support is likely to be given at the Frankfurt Spring Fair in March 1986.

THE ARTS

European Discussions

22. Mr. Murphy asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts, what discussions he has had with Ministers for the Arts of other European countries; and if he will make a statement on the subjects raised.

Mr. Waldegrave: My noble Friend met Ministers responsible for culture within the Community in Brussels on 28 May. They discussed a number of questions, including the needs of the European film and TV programme industry, policy on book pricing, and the future organisation of work within the cultural programme.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Pound Sterling

Mr. Stewart asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the average value, taking the average internal purchasing power of the pound sterling during 1970 as 100p, of the pound sterling in each year since 1979.

Mr. Lawson: The figures, which are based on the RPI, are as follows:

Internal purchasing power of the pound (1970=100p)

	Pence
1980	28
1981	25
1982	23
1983	22

Parliamentary Votes (Allocation of Expenditure)

Mr. Faulds asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer with reference to the answer to the hon. Member for Warley East, on 20 May, Official Report, columns 340-341, whether, when Parliament approves the total provision of Votes under the relevant Appropriation Acts, the Treasury may credit the equivalent sums of unused and surrendered balances to other subheads, without first obtaining Parliamentary approval by means of a revote or otherwise, in those cases where the recipient subhead is such as to involve direct public expenditure while the unused balances thus disposed of were originally voted under a subhead restricted to transactions confined by statute within the central Government: and what is his policy towards exceptional cases of this nature.

Mr. Peter Rees: Yes. The Government have discretion to vary the allocation of the total provision approved by Parliament between any subheads within the same vote. This discretion applies equally to transfers from subheads covering transactions within central Government to other subheads, although in exercising it the Government take into account the fact that any transfer between provision classified as non-public expenditure and provision classified as public expenditure could affect net public expenditure. However, in the case to which the hon. Member alludes expenditure on both subheads is classified as public.

The Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster announced on 24 April that the Government would be looking at the Vote arrangements governing the acceptance of assets in lieu of tax. That review is in progress.

Mortgage Interest Relief

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, pursuant to the answer of 16 May, Official Report, columns 189-90, he will provide the figures for mortgage interest tax relief for 1983-84 onwards, excluding the estimated cost of relief in respect of mortgages previously under the option mortgages scheme.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Johnson Matthey Bankers

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Bank of England first indicated to the company its concern about the financial circumstances of Johnson Matthey Bankers.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

European Community (Legislation)

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether there is any material, other than the annexes to the letter sent by the Commissioners of Customs and Excise to the European Commission on 28 December 1977, copies of which have now been placed in the Library, pursuant to his earlier answer, Official Report, 4 June, column 115, which an individual would need to have to know his rights and obligations under the directly applicable legislation of the European Communities.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

SCOTLAND

Forestry Commission

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the duties and responsibilities of the Forestry Commission's conservancy private forestry and environment officers since the conservancy reorganisation of April.

Mr. John MacKay: The principal functions of the Forestry Commission's conservancy private forestry and environment officers are, in broad terms, —to advise the conservator on the best use of Forestry Commission resources to achieve a reasonable balance between forestry operations and the protection or enhancement of the environment;

—to promote interest in private forestry and provide guidance to forest district managers on all professional forestry matters relating to private woodlands;

—to co-ordinate sources of advice on all matters relating to broadleaved woodland;

—to provide general oversight and guidance on the implementation of plant health regulations relating to forestry and forest products;

— to ensure that satisfactory liaison is maintained throughout the conservancy with statutory bodies and agencies and organisations representing woodland owners, conservation groups and recreation interests;

—to ensure that the work of the Forestry Commission is properly presented to the public.

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when the Forestry Commission, in its consideration of applications for felling licences for the clearance of broadleaved woods, adopted its policy of presumption against such clearances; and what size of wood is considered to be a small wood, such that it might be an exception to this presumption, as outlined in the Forestry Commission's booklet on consultation procedures, issued in May 1984.

Mr. John MacKay: The Forestry Commission's approach to the consideration of applications for felling licences for the conversion of woodland to agricultural use has been evolving over a number of years. In March 1984, the point had been reached when the commission's local staff were instructed that there should be a presumption against such conversion. This was reflected in the long-term policy proposals made in the commission's consultative paper "Broadleaves in Britain" issued in May 1984 and formally published as commission policy in its booklet on the consultation procedures issued at that time.

The presumption against conversion, as stated in that booklet, did not include small woods which were not visited by the public and were not a feature in the landscape. A small wood was generally regarded as being one of less than three hectares, but the interpretation of this was dependent on other factors such as the extent and type of surrounding woodlands.

In the light of the operation of this policy and discussions in connection with its broadleaves policy review, the commission subsequently decided that consideration of each case should be on the basis of an initial presumption against the conversion of any woodland to agriculture. This has been reflected in the latest edition of the booklet on the consultation procedures issued in April 1985.

Voluntary Organisations (Grants)

Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total value of the grants awarded to organisations under section 10(1) of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968.

Mr. John MacKay: Grant payments made in 1984-85 totalled £2,911,490 for revenue expenditure and £148,656 for capital.

Afforestation

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions the Forestry Commission has awarded grant retrospectively for afforestation under the foresty grant scheme; and if he will list in the Official Report the names of the sites involved, their areas, and the reasons why retrospective grant was awarded.

Mr. John MacKay: Since the introduction of the forestry grant scheme in October 1981, the Forestry Commission has approved over 5,500 applications totalling some 157,000 hectares. Of these, approval to planting was given retrospectively on only 10 occasions. The names, location and areas of the sites involved are as follows:

Name and location	Area on which approval granted retrospectively (hectares)
Syke Farm, near Buttermere, Cumbria	1·2
College Estate, Kirkoswald, Penrith, Cumbria	0·9
Yonsea Farm, Ashford, Kent	1·3
Exton Estate, near Oakham, Leicestershire	3·2
Thurlow Estate, near Haverhill, Suffolk	0·4
Annat Estate, Lochaber, Highland Region	15·0
Otter Estate, Tighnabruaich, Strathclyde Region	5·1
Strathfillan Estate, near Bridge of Orchy, Central Region	95·0
Doune Estate, Doune by Stirling, Central Region	0·4
High Kiers, Kyle and Carrick, Strathclyde Region	96·0

In eight of the above-named cases, the commission felt morally bound to pay grant because the applicant had been advised or been given the impression, either orally or in writing, that approval had been given and had proceeded with the planting on that basis. In the remaining two cases, an administrative error resulted in payment being made for planting carried out before the scheme had been formally approved.

In all these cases, consultations had been carried out with other interested authorities, as appropriate, and agreement reached on the proposals before a decision was reached to give retrospective approval.

Certificate of Education

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the qualifications, the age limits and the maximum number of scripts per marker laid down for Scottish certificate of education examiners; and whether any of these rules have been relaxed in the current year.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The qualifications for appointment as markers of Scottish certificate of education examination scripts and the duties of the post are matters for the Scottish Examination Board. The board stipulates that applicants for appointment as markers must have at least three years relevant experience of presenting pupils for the Scottish certificate of education or three years examining experience in tertiary education in Scotland. There is no minimum age limit for appointment but a maximum limit of 70 years is generaly applied. The maximum number of scripts per marker varies from year to year and from subject to subject. Each year every applicant is informed of his maximum script allocation early in the appointment process.

The board has not relaxed its experience or age criteria this year except in the case of 2 experienced markers who were retained by the board although marginally over the age limit. In most subjects, the maximum script allocation in 1985 increased by comparison with 1984 but in no subject has the maximum allocation increased by more than 25 scripts.

Forestry Commission (Consultation)

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the Forestry Commission, when considering ways of achieving greater public accountability in its regional advisory committees, intends to consult interested voluntary bodies.

Mr. John MacKay: I can confirm that it is the Forestry Commission's intention to consult with a number of interested voluntary bodies over its proposals once they have been formulated.

Primary and Secondary Schools

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the total numbers of (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools in Scotland in 1984, 1983, 1982, 1981 and 1980.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information is as follows:

Number of Schools/Departments
Year (September)

	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984
Education Authority
Primary	2,522	2,499	2,489	2,461	2,443
Secondary	444	439	442	444	440
Grant-aided
Primary	21	21	20	20	19
Secondary	23	22	21	20	19
Independent
Primary	66	65	63	58	58
Secondary	55	54	54	50	52

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by region (a) the primary schools and (b) the secondary schools which were closed during 1983 and 1984.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Fife Regional Council (Budget)

Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the effect on rate poundage in the current year of Fife regional council's expenditure in excess of guidelines in the last year and the current year and of its budgeting for an assumed rate support grant penalty equal to the current year's expenditure in excess of guidelines.

Mr. Ancram: The effect on the rate poundage in the current year of Fife regional council of budgeting £7·762 million above guidelines in 1985-86 with provision for a grant penalty of £7·5 million and a deficit carried forward resulting from the grant penalty for overspending in 1984-85 is 8·1p. The region's overspending of £4·465 million in 1984-85 is equivalent to 2·3p in rate poundage terms.

Pupil-Teacher Ratio

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what, as at September 1984, were the pupil-teacher ratios in education authority schools for (a) nursery schools, (b) primary schools and (c) secondary schools; and how these figures compare with those at September 1983.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information is as follows:

Pupil-Teacher ratios in education authority schools

Year	Nursery	Primary	Secondary
September
1983	25·3	20·3	14·0
1984*	25·6	20·3	13·7

*The figures for 1984 are provisional.

Edinburgh District Council (Budget)

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received regarding a meeting with Edinburgh district council to discuss its budget; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: On 14 June Edinburgh district council requested a meeting with my right hon. Friend to discuss its representations against his proposal to reduce its rate by 5·2p. On 17 June my right hon. Friend and I met representatives of the council.

My right hon. Friend will now be considering, in the light of these representations, whether and in what terms to lay a report before Parliament seeking approval to a reduction in the council's rate.

Glysophate

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland under what particular conditions and for what particular management purposes the Forestry Commission is considering aerial applications of the broad spectrum herbicide glysophate; and why in those conditions, spot treatment by hand-held applicators is not considered suitable.

Mr. John MacKay: Glysophate is being used for the control of dense grasses and weeds. Aerial applications has been chosen in a few areas where conditions, such as the size of the area involved or access difficulties, would make spot treatment by hand an inefficient means of applying the chemical.

Broadleaved Woodland

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions in the year to 31 March the Forestry Commission consulted the Agricultural Department over applications for felling licences to clear woodland for agricultural purposes.

Mr. John MacKay [pursuant to his reply, 6 June 1985, c. 256]: In the year ended 31 March 1985, the Forestry Commission consulted the Agricultural Departments over 163 such cases.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions, in the year to 31 March, the Forestry Commission issued felling licences for broadleaved woods; of these, how many licences had conditions requiring the replanting purely of broadleaved trees; and how many hectares of woodland this totalled.

Mr. John MacKay [pursuant to his reply, 6 June 1985, c. 256]: In the year ended 31 March 1985 the Forestry Commission issued 224 licences for the felling of broadleaved trees, of which 103 licences covering 135 hectares had conditions requiring replanting with broadleaves only. In addition, a significant number of licences were issued requiring restocking with a mixture of broadleaves and conifers, designed to lead eventually to woodlands with a predominantly broadleaved character.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions in the year to 31 March the Forestry Commission issued felling licences which permitted the clear-felling of broadleaved woodland for conversion to agriculture, and how many hectares of woodland this totalled.

Mr. John MacKay [pursuant to his reply, 6 June 1985, c. 256]: There were 34 felling licences issued in the year ended 31 March 1984 covering 67 hectares.

The information given in my reply to the hon. Member on 25 April, at columns 532-33, named those broadleaved woodlands licensed for clearfelling for conversion to agriculture in the period 1 January 1985 to 31 March 1985, but should have ascribed 33 of those to the year ended 31 March 1985 and not 31 as stated. A further licence of the type granted in the year but omitted from the list brings this total to 34. This related to a 0·5 hectare woodland at Brook Vessons farm, Shropshire.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions in the year to 31 March officials from his Department confirmed to the Forestry Commission that a proposal to clearfell a broadleaved woodland and convert it to agricultural land would make a significant contribution to the viability and economy of the agricultural holding concerned.

Mr. John MacKay [pursuant to his reply, 12 June 1985, c. 452]: There were 21 such occasions, covering all the Agricultural Departments, in the year ended 31 March 1985.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions in the year to 31 March the Forestry Commission issued felling licences which permitted felling of broadleaved woods, without there being conditions attached for the replanting solely of broadleaved trees, and what area of woodland this involved.

Mr. John MacKay [pursuant to his reply, 12 June 1985, c. 452]: In the year ended 31 March 1985, the Forestry Commission issued 121 such licences covering 334 hectares.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

South Africa

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Mr. Ewen Fergusson, deputy under-secretary at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, has visited the United States of America to discuss developments in South Africa in the current year.

Mr. Rifkind: Mr. Ewen Fergusson visited the United States from 18-25 January for a familiarisation visit in relation to his official responsibilities for the Middle East and Africa. His programme included, in New York, meetings with United Nations permanent representatives and officials in the Secretariat General and, in Washington, members of the Senate and House of Representatives, congressional officials and officials in the White House and State Department.

EC (Voting Procedures)

Mr. Stanbrook asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government and what practice they follow when a veto is exercised by a member state on a matter for which the European Community treaties prescribe majority voting.

Mr. Rifkind: Successive British Governments have held the view that when a member state considers its very important interests to be at stake, discussion should be continued until unanimous agreement is reached. It is our practice to decline to participate in a vote where a member state has explicitly opposed this on grounds that its very important national interests are at stake.

European Council (Luxembourg Meeting)

Mr. Stanbrook asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the proposals made by member states for dealing with very important national interests at the Luxembourg meeting of the European Council, giving the names of the member states which supported each proposal and the method of treating very important national interests which was proposed in the ensuing Luxembourg protocol, with the names of the member states which supported it.

Mr. Rifkind: The clearest statements of the positions of member states on the Luxembourg compromise were made in declarations which accompanied their signatures of the Solemn Declaration at Stuttgart in June 1983. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

British Nationals (Prison Sentences)

Dr. Michael Clark asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British nationals are serving custodial sentences in foreign prisons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Our records show that currently there are 564 British citizens (of whom 328 are in Western Europe) and 76 British Dependent Territories citizens (of whom 64 are in Asia) serving custodial sentences in foreign prisons.

Mr. Marwan Lostan

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will now give details of the clarification provided on 5 March by the Syrian authorities of the reasons why a Syrian national, Mr. Marwan Lostan, was in possession of a Syrian diplomatic passport at the time of his arrest on 20 January; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave my hon. Friend on 18 April at column 252. We regard this incident as closed.

Syrian Nationals

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any Syrian diplomats have been required to leave the United Kingdom since the deportation of four Syrian nationals on 29 January; and what observations have been made to the Syrian chargé d'affaires regarding the need to avoid violent incidents in the United Kingdom involving Syrian nationals.

Mr. Luce: The Syrian Government are well aware of our grave concern about the circumstances which led to the deportation of four Syrian nationals on 29 January. No Syrian diplomats have been required to leave the United Kingdom in this connection.

Tel Aviv (Palestinian Attack)

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, pursuant to the Under-Secretary of State's reply to the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton on 2 May Official Report, column 223, about the attempted terrorist attack by Palestinians on Tel Aviv, he has anything to add in view of the fact that responsibility for the incident was claimed by Yasser Arafat's branch of the Palestine Liberation Organisation in a radio interview by Hani Al-Hassan on Radio Monte Carlo on 26 April; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: We are aware of the reports referred to. We have repeatedly stressed our view that all concerned, and particularly the PLO, should renounce violence and concentrate on the search for a peaceful solution to the Palestinian problem.

Old Admiralty Building (Security Cover)

Mr. Crowther asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has received any complaints against the present silent hours security cover provided at the Old Admiralty Building by the Department of the Environment custody guards.

Mr. Renton: No.

Mr. Crowther asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what grounds he proposes to change the security arrangements for silent hours cover at the Old Admiralty Building.

Mr. Renton: The Departments housed in the Old Admiralty Building call for closer protection and patrolling than the Property Service Agency custodians generally provide during silent hours. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has therefore decided to replace them with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office's own security force.

Diplomatic Immunity

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commowealth Affairs what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the exercise of their powers to send back to their country of origin foreign diplomats who refuse to vacate rented premises when requested to do so by the owners of the property; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Requests by landlords to tenants to vacate premises may lead to a dispute about the legal rights of each side. As was stated in the recent White Paper on Diplomatic Immunities and Privileges (Cmnd. 9497), we take a serious view of any reliance on diplomatic immunity from civil jurisdiction to evade a legal obligation, or to impose on another party to a dispute the person's own view as to liability. In such cases we try to bring the parties together to ensure a satisfactory outcome. But if it is thought appropriate we are prepared to consider the removal of a diplomat who abuses his immunity in this way.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will review the status of representatives of foreign Governments and organisations based in the United Kingdom and the diplomatic immunities and privileges granted to them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: We have just concluded a review of the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations and reported to Parliament (Cmnd. 9497). Our policy towards international organisations is based on the principle that they should receive only such privileges and immunities as are necessary to enable them to carry out their functions. This principle is elaborated in Resolution (69)29 of the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House (in an appendix to Council of Europe Assembly Document No. 2623).

Sri Lanka (Visas)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many applications for visas have been received on the grounds of severe hardship, as defined in the Home Office press statement of 29 May, by the high commission in Colombo; and how many have been (a) granted and (b) refused (i) overall, and (ii) to Tamils, respectively.

Mr. Renton: The High Commission in Colombo has received a total of 17 applications, submitted on the grounds of severe hardship, all from Sri Lankans of Tamil origin. Sixteen have been refused; the other is to be referred to the Home Office for a decision.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the number of applications for visas made to the British high commission in Colombo since the requirement was introduced; how many have been granted; of these, how many have been granted to Tamils; and how many applications are currently pending.

Mr. Renton: The number of applications for visas received by the High Commission between 30 May and 14 June inclusive was 698, of which 542 were granted. Of those granted 175 were for Sri Lankans of Tamil origin. Thirteen applications are currently pending.

DEFENCE

Nerve Gas Bombs

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the United States Commission touring Europe recently made any representations to the United Kingdom Government regarding British attitudes towards the storage in the United Kingdom of United States nerve gas bombs; whether any other United States sources have made representations on this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: The position remains as set out in the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the member for Bexleyheath (Mr. Townsend) on 26 March at columns 180-81.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Defence what co-operation the United Kingdom receives from Chile in connection with the defence of the Falkland Islands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: The United Kingdom has had normal diplomatic relations, including a defence element, with Chile since 1980. This includes the supply of loan service personnel, training and visits by service personnel. In addition, Chilean ports are used by Her Majesty's ships, including those on duty in the South Atlantic, for rest and recreation purposes.

Chile

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all loan service personnel who have been posted to Chile since 1 July 1982.

Mr. Stanley: Since July 1982, RAF instructors have been loaned to Chile on a number of occasions. Apart from a period in 1982, when two United Kingdom loan service personnel were assisting the Chilean Air Force, only one instructor has been on loan at any one time.

Strategic Defence Initiative

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence what contractual obligations, legal, commercial and technical, the United States of America is requesting of intending commercial participants in the strategic defence initiative; and if he will place a copy of such terms in the Library.

Mr. Butler: Discussion of areas of British contribution to SDI research is at an early stage and no standard contractual terms have been proposed.

Royal Navy (Dental Work)

Mr. Eadie asked the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for contracting out dental work for the Royal Navy; and how this will affect Scotland.

Mr. Lee: As part of the continuing search for better value for money in the defence services, a review of dental ancilliary support for all three services was undertaken in 1983. Thereafter a trial was conducted from 1 April 1984 to 31 March 1985 to assess the feasibility of contracting out dental technician support to commercial dental laboratories as an alternative to the work being undertaken by dental technicians within the services. The results are currently being collated and we expect to announce a decision later this year.

Naval Vessels (Port and Refuelling Facilities)

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence by which countries, for what reasons and on how many occasions in the last year British naval vessels have been denied port or refuelling facilities of any sort.

Mr. Stanley: As I said to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on 24 January 1984 at column 458, discussions about Royal Navy ship visits overseas are confidential between Her Majesty's Government and the Governments concerned.

RAF Alconbury

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence how much it will cost the Royal Air Force in terms of accommodation, transport and other facilities for personnel who will staff the Rapier anti-aircraft missiles guarding the American facilities at Alconbury from 1986.

Mr. Lee: I will answer shortly.

Airborne Early Warning System

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions his Department has had with General Electric Company-Marconi about a proposed new airborne early warning system to be developed with Lockheed.

Mr. Butler: I understand that the radar to be used in this venture is a derivative of the one under development for the Nimrod AEW project. GEC Avionics has, therefore, kept my officials informed of its plans.

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the implications for the Nimrod airborne early warning programme of the proposed joint development of an airborne early warning system by General Electric Company-Marconi and Lockheed.

Mr. Butler: I will answer shortly.

Molesworth Cruise Missile Base

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the Property Services Agency map of Molesworth cruise missile base.

Mr. Lee: I will answer shortly.

Fleet Headquarters, Northwood

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on the reasons for the delay in the implementation of the new command and control systems and related computers at Fleet headquarters, Northwood and on the consequences of the delay;

(2) what assessment he has made of the implications of the cause and consequences of delay in the implementation of the new command and control systems and related computers at Fleet headquarters, Northwood for the new generation of RAF command and control systems and related computers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butler: The delays in implementing the new command and control systems and related computers at Fleet headquarters, Northwood, arise from late completion of the works programme and underestimation of the complexity of the development. The consequence is that improvements to our command and control capabilities are being implemented more slowly than we had hoped. The hon. Member will understand that I cannot give details of the consequences of the delay for our operational capabilities.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Hospital Nursing Provision

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many hospital beds and qualified nurses there are in Northern Ireland per head of population.

Mr. Chris Patten: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Cattle

Mr. Nicholson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many cattle have been rejected in meat plants in each of the last 12 weeks; and if he will list the weekly numbers;

(2) how many cattle have been killed in meat plants in Northern Ireland in each of the last 12 weeks; and if he will list the weekly numbers.

Dr. Boyson: The available information is as follows:

Week commencing	Cattle killed	*Carcases rejected under Beef variable premium scheme
11 March	10,817	580
18 March	10,475	513
25 March	11,406	555

SOCIAL SERVICES

Health Education Council

Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about the work of health education councils during the last 12 months; if he has any plans to reduce their activities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Letters about the Health Education Council in the past year have included references to its publications and to its work in the fields of pregnancy, personal relationships and nutrition. We have no plans to reduce the council's activities.

Social Security Review

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if the presence test he proposes in paragraph 2.87 chapter 2 volume 2 of the Green Paper on the reform of social security is to cover one year, or more; and if he will make a statement on its relationship to immigration rules.

Mr. Newton: The form of the presence test will be decided in the light of comments received on the Green Paper "Reform of Social Security" (Cmnd. 9517-19).

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether his proposals for the income support scheme include an increase in overall expenditure on the supplementary benefit scale rates for children.

Mr. Newton: Decisions on the rates of income support will be taken nearer the date of implementation. The Green Paper makes clear that we shall be seeking to give greater recognition to the needs of families with children, and proposes the introduction of a new family premium for all families with children on top of the scale rates for individual children. Lone parents would have an additional premium, and families with a child receiving a disability benefit would have a double family premium.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why administrative costs on death grants have risen from the sum of £8 million referred to in paragraph 6 of the 1982 consultative document "The Death Grant" to the sum of £12 million referred to in paragraph 5.30 of volume II of the Green Paper on "Reform of Social Security" (Cmnd. 9578).

Mr. Whitney: The revised estimate in the Green Paper was based on new information and takes account of, for example, increases in the cost of salaries, accommodation, postage and post office encashment charges.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will discuss with members of the inquiry into provision for retirement his policy towards publication of the report of the inquiry, in the light of observations made by some members about the proposals on this matter set out in the Green Paper; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The Government's proposals for pensions policy are set out in the Green paper on Reform of Social Security. This took account of the work undertaken during the inquiry into provision for retirement. It was on this basis that outside advisers took part in the inquiry. They are, of course, free to express their personal views on the conclusions which the Government have reached.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if it is his intention that the social fund proposed in the review of social security will replace existing payments under (a) section 1 of the Child Care Act and (b) Regulation 9 of the regulation governing payment for board and lodgings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The Green Paper indicates our hope that, when established, the social fund will provide opportunities for greater flexibility in promoting "Care in the Community" objectives through closer co-operation between the social security system and other statutory and voluntary agencies. We have, however, no plans at present for the fund to replace payments under the provisions mentioned; and we do not in general see it as a replacement for the existing powers of local authorities.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much he expects the production of (a) video material and (b) publicity and explanatory material in support of his Green Paper on the future of the welfare state to cost.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 22 May 1985, c. 470]: The video which is being prepared as part of our arrangements to inform DHSS staff of the Green Paper proposals is expected to incur costs of about £5,000, excluding the staff time devoted to preparing the video which is not separately identified; it is not yet possible to give firm estimates of the cost of other explanatory material which is under consideration. We intend that all such expenditure should be contained within existing budgets.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what he estimates to be the total cost of the social security reviews.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 22 May 1985, c. 470]: The main element of the cost of the social security review is the staff costs of officials working wholly or part-time on the review. No special record was kept of the proportion of staff time devoted to work connected with the review and no accurate estimate of the total cost of the review is therefore possible. The separate report of the independent housing benefit review (Cmnd. 9520) gives the estimated cost of that review as £148,577.

Mr. John asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the assessment unit for income support will in all cases be the same as the assessment unit for supplementary benefit.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 13 June 1985, c. 559-60]: The resources and needs of partners and their children will continue to be aggregated.

Mr. John asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether all those receiving income support or family credit will be automatically eligible for help with funeral expenses from the social fund.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 13 June 1985, c. 559-60]: Yes, subject to further consideration during the consultative period of the extent to which capital should be taken into account for this purpose.

Mr. John asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether the loss to supplementary benefit claimants of a proportion of their housing benefit in respect of rates will be balanced by a compensating adjustment in the levels of income support;

(2) whether a couple claiming income support (i) with children or (ii) without children will receive less than the rate for a couple over 25 when (a) the income support claimant is under 25, (b) the claimant's partner is under 25 or (c) both are under 25, and whether, where this is the case, the differential will in each instance be the same;

(3) if he will list in order of magnitude all the premium rates to which persons claiming income support may be entitled.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 13 June 1985, c. 559-60]: Decisions on the rates of income support will be taken nearer the date of implementation.

Mr. John asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the transitional protection to be introduced at the time of change from supplementary benefit to income support will preserve the real value or the cash value of benefit.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 13 June 1985, c. 560]: Our aim will be to ensure that no one should experience a reduction in weekly benefit as a result of the change from supplementary benefit to income support.

Mr. John asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether a disabled person claiming income support who is also a lone parent will receive a premium in respect of each of these conditions.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 13 June 1985 c. 560]: An income support claimant with dependent children will be able to receive both the family premium and a client grow premium where eligible. Our general intention is that a claimant with underlying entitlement to more than one client group premium would receive whichever of those premia is the higher.

Mr. John asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether a premium rate of income support will be paid to those caring for elderly or disabled persons;

(2) whether he proposes to make changes in benefit payable to those caring for elderly and disabled people.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 13 June 1985, c. 560]: We have no plans to change the circumstances in which invalid care allowance is payable. We will be giving further consideration to the position of income support claimants who are caring for a severely disabled person.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how the sum in the proposed family credit allowance to cover the cost of school meals will be calculated.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 13 June 1985, c. 560]: No decision has yet been taken about the precise calculation of this element in the proposed family credit.

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will amplify the meaning of accrued pension rights under the state earnings related pension scheme as the term is used in the Green Paper of 3 June.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 13 June 1985, c. 560]: The Green Paper on Reform of Social Security makes clear the Government's commitment to honour all pension entitlements earned under the state earnings-related scheme. The detailed arrangements for securing this are among the matters for further examination during consultation on the Green Paper proposals.

Mr. John asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether attendance allowance and mobility allowance will be disregarded in the means test for income support.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 13 June 1985, c. 560]: The Green Paper contains no proposals for changes in the present rules on the treatment of attendance allowance and mobility allowance for the purposes of the new income support scheme, but attendance allowance is of course already taken into account in supplementary benefit board and lodging cases.

Mr. John asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether deductions from benefit made to recover loans made as part of the budgeting element of the social fund will be offset against the cash limit for that fund;

(2) whether each of his local offices will have its own cash limit in respect of the social fund;

(3) whether separate cash limits will be applied to the four elements of the social fund.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 12 June 1985, c. 487]: Final decisions about how the budget for the social fund is to be administered will only be taken when the results of the consultation on the Social Security Green Paper are known. The Green Paper sets out the principles that a clear limit to the social fund's role should be defined by means of a fixed annual budget and that judgments about expenditure from the fund are best taken locally. Our provisional view is that the budget should relate to net expenditure in the year.

Mr. John asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the lump sum to be paid to widows on bereavement will be disregarded in the means test for help with funeral costs.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 12 June 1985, c. 487]: Yes.

Ancillary Services (Bradford)

Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide current figures for the cost of cleaning, catering, laundry and linen services to the National Health Service in the Bradford district health authority.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The annual accounts of the Bradford health authority for 1983-84, the latest available, show expenditure on these services as:

Domestic cleaning	2,929,000
Catering	2,592,000
Laundry	432,000
Linen services	700,000

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, in respect of the press release issued by his Department on 4 October 1984 stating that regulations would be laid as soon as possible to amend the supplementary benefit rules to allow payments to strikers for funeral expenses for which they are responsible, (a) when he referred proposals for this amendment to the Social Security Advisory Committee, (b) whether the Social Security Advisory Committee have responded to him and (c) what action he intends to take.

Mr. Whitney: The Social Security Advisory Committee agreed on 15 May 1985, in accordance with section 10(2)(b) of the Social Security Act 1980, that the proposal to amend the Supplementary Benefit (Trade Disputes and Recovery from Earnings) Regulations 1980 to allow payments to strikers in respect of funeral expenses for which they are responsible should not be referred to it. Amending regulations are in course of being prepared and will be laid before the House shortly.

North-Western RHA (General Manager)

Mr. Arnold asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has appointed a regional general manager in the North-Western regional health authority.

Mr. Kenneth Clark: North-Western regional health authority appointed Mr. G. J. Greenshields as its regional manager on 9 September 1984.

Statutory Sick Pay Scheme

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what has been the number of successful appeals against refusal to pay statutory sick pay in each year from 1983 to 1985, inclusive;

(2) how many appeals against refusal to pay statutory sick pay were received by his Department in each year from 1983 to 1985, inclusive, for the county of Leicestershire and the city of Leicester, respectively.

Mr. Peter Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many appeals against refusal to pay statutory sick pay were received in his Department for the last 12 months for which figures are available for the county of Lancashire.

Mr. Whitney: I regret information is not yet available. Information about appeals to social security appeals tribunals on statutory sick pay questions was first collected from 1 April 1984. Its production has been delayed by the effects of the dispute at Newcastle computer centre during 1984. I shall write to the hon. Members when the information becomes available, which should be later this summer.

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of offences by employers under the Social Security and Housing Benefits Acts, respectively, with respect to statutory sick pay during the years 1983 to 1985 in Leicestershire.

Mr. Whitney: There were no prosecutions by this Department against employers in Leicestershire during the years 1983 to 1985 for offences connected with statutory sick pay under the Social Security and Housing Benefits Acts.

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many offences were committed by employers under the Social Security and Housing Benefit Act with regard to statutory sick pay for the last 12 months for which figures are available in Lancashire.

Mr. Whitney: There have been no prosecutions by this Department under the Social Security and Housing Benefits Act against employers in Lancashire in the last 12 months for offences connected with statutory sick pay.

Drugs (Adverse Reactions)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his answer of 24 May, Official Report, column 595, if he will categorise the 29 and 527 adverse reaction reports related to products containing only vitamin B6 pyridoxine, and to combination products containing pyridoxine and other ingredients, respectively, according to the year of the report and the nature of the adverse reaction.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The information requested is in the following tables. The Committee on Safety of Medicines has now received 528 reports relating to combination products containing pyridoxine. The date a report is received does not necessarily indicate the year in which the suspected adverse reaction occurred. It is very important to bear in mind that a report does not necessarily indicate a causal relationship between a product and a reported reaction. It would be particularly unwise to draw any inference about the safety of pyridoxine from the reports on combination products.

Pensions (Channel Islands)

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services for what reason the Channel Islands are not included under section 1 of unemployment benefit leaflet 674 in respect of payment of retirement pensions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The Channel Islands are not included under section 1 of form Unemployment Benefit Leaflet 674 because they are not part of Great Britain and have their own social security schemes. The form Unemployment Benefit Leaflet 674 makes no reference to retirement pension.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why his Department no longer keeps central records of hospital waiting lists for particular hospitals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: In-patient waiting list statistics for individual hospitals are available centrally. They show the waiting lists for individual specialties but not for particular operations or diagnoses.

Nurses

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish details of the research being undertaken by his Department into the movement of nurses between the public and private sectors.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We are funding research into the movement of nursing staff between the National Health Service and the independent sector which is being carried out by Professors Williams and Knowledon of the medical care research unit, Sheffield university. Fieldwork is due to be completed by the end of this year and we expect a report in mid-1986.

NHS (Pay)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the latest estimates of the pay and prices factors for 1985-86 for hospital and community health services and family practitioner services current expenditure as a result of the pay settlements for doctors, dentists, nurses, midwives, health visitors and allied professions announced on 6 June 1985, Official Report, column 194.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We are not distinguishing between separate pay and price factors. There was an increase of 5½ per cent. in health authorities' cash allocations which was to meet all pay and price increases and service developments. We cannot give a sensible estimate at this stage for inflation in the hospital and community health service because of the outstanding pay settlements for non-Review Body groups; nor can we make a firm estimate for the family practitioner service.

Newcastle Office (Members' Correspondence)

Mr. Gale asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current delay that hon. Members may expect before receipt of replies to inquiries resulting fom the recent prolonged industrial action at the Newcastle offices of his Department.

Mr. Whitney: I am looking into the matter and shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Pensions

Mr. John asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide estimates, at 1984-85 prices, of projected expenditure on the state earnings-related pension scheme in 1995 to 1996, 2005 to 2006, 2023 to 2024 and 2033 to 2034 if the proposals in the Social Security Green Paper are implemented.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are his proposals regarding the preservation of pensions already earned under the state earnings-related pensions scheme regarding (a) the uprating formula to be used, (b) the accrual rate to be used, (c) the retention of the best 20 years formula and (d) the arrangements contracted out schemes will be expected to have in order to preserve guaranteed minimum pensions.

Mr. Newton: The Green Paper on Reform of Social Security makes clear the Government's commitment to honour all entitlements earned in the state earnings-related pension scheme. Equally, schemes which have been contracted-out will be required to secure all accrued rights to guaranteed minimum pensions. Detailed arrangements for achieving these objectives are among the matters for consideration during consultations on the Green Paper.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what, in the light of the proposals to abolish the state earnings-related pension scheme for all who are more than 15 years from retirement, are his proposals for the percentage rebate on national insurance contributions to be given to occupational pension schemes to cover the cost of their continued contracted-out obligations to older workers; what assessment he has made of the extent to which his proposals will cover the cost of these obligations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Paragraphs 1.62 to 1.64 of chapter 1 in volume 2 of the Green Paper on the Reform of Social Security set out the Government's proposals for the structure of national insurance contributions from 1987-88 onwards. Implications for schemes which continue to provide contracted-out occupational pensions for older workers is one of the issues to be considered during consultations on the Green Paper.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what estimate he has made, in the light of his proposals to abolish the state earnings-related pension scheme for all who are more than 15 years from retirement, of the number of occupational schemes which may seek to contract back in before April 1987, and of the amount of money that will thereby be withdrawn from availability for investment in the financial markets by the pension funds concerned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: No estimates have been made of the kind requested. Consultations with pensions interests on the Green Paper will enable them to indicate the reactions of contracted-out schemes to the proposals.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the basis for his statement that it is now expected that there will be three million more pensioners at the end of the century than was predicted in 1975.

Mr. Newton: In my right hon. Friend's statement on 3 June at column 37, on publication of the Green Paper on Reform of Social Security, he said:

"The analysis undertaken during the review has shown that the number of pensioners for whom we will eventually need to provide is 3 million greater than was recognised in 1974 and 4 million higher than it is today." — [Official Report, 3 June 1985; Vol. 80, c. 37.]

The population projections made in 1974 only went as far as 2013. The Green Paper gives projections to 2033-34.

Frozen Food

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many consignments of quick frozen food for import from, or export to, other European Economic Community countries, respectively, have been rejected on health and food hygiene grounds during each of the past five years.

Mr. John Patten: This information is not held centrally.

Departmental Computers

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied that the design systems of his Department's computers are properly sychronised with the tasks to be undertaken by his Department in relation to the implementation of the proposals in his Green Paper on social security; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Implementation of the proposals in the Green Paper on Reform of Social Security would require some changes to existing computer systems, and appropriate consideration of these is in hand. The need to allow for possible implementation of proposals in the Green Paper is being taken into account in the planning and development of new computer systems.

Specialist Claims Control

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report his estimate of the saving to his Department's budget as a result of adjustments to claims following checks by specialist claims control officers.

Mr. Whitney: In the year ended 12 March 1985 specialist claims control teams achieved estimated benefit savings of £6.9 million.

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the number of individual claimants checked by special claims control teams in Scotland last year.

Mr. Whitney: During 1984 the specialist claims control teams in Scotland examined 2621 claims.

Abortions

Mr. Hargreaves asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total number of abortions performed in England and Wales since 1968, to the latest date available.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In the period 1968 to the end of the September quarter 1984, there were 2,251,813 legal abortions carried out in England and Wales. No figures are yet available for the fourth quarter of 1984.

Health Charges

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to reply to the letter of the hon. Member for Glasgow, Maryhill to the Minister of Health of 19 March, about the number of people entitled to exemption from prescription charges and remission of dental and optical charges on grounds of low income; and if he will publish his reply in the Official Report.

Mr. John Patten: I have written to the hon. Member today. The text is as follows.

Thank you for your letter of 19 March about Kenneth Clarke's Answer of 14 March to your Question about the numbers eligible for remission of NHS charges. I am sorry you have had to wait so long for a reply but we have been making enquiries to find out if we could provide any meaningful additional information. I am afraid, however, that we have had to conclude that we can be of little further help.

Let me explain. It would be wrong to think that the Family Expenditure Survey (FES) data can be used to estimate the number of people eligible for low income exemption or full remission of NHS charges. At best, the FES can be used to derive an imprecise estimate of the numbers with sufficiently low incomes to qualify. However eligibility depends also on the person having a need for the prescription, glasses etc. and any FES estimate will include an unknown proportion who have no such need. For that same reason, any FES estimate cannot be combined with data about the number of exemptions and remissions actually claimed to derive a take-up figure.

Moreover, information about dental and optical charges would be incomplete without an estimate of the significant number who qualify for partial remission. This cannot be done from FES as entitlement depends not just on the patient's income and need for the service but also on the level of charge applicable for the particular type of treatment or appliance required by the patient.

In view of the inadequacies of FES estimates, we thought it would be unhelpful to give an answer to your Question on that basis but instead we provided you with the best factual information available to us.

However, since you referred specifically in your letter to FES estimate of exemption from prescription charges provided earlier by Tony Newton, we have calculated that in 1981 there were 3·9 million people in Great Britain whose low incomes would have exempted them from prescription charges. The figure for 1983 is not yet available. Information about the number of people who held current low income exemption certificates in 1981 and 1983 is also not available. The best information we have on that subject is that some 55,000 and 86,000 low income exemption certificates were issued in the first and last quarters respectively of 1983.

It would take considerably longer to estimate from FES the full remission figures for dental and optical charges. In view of the qualifications which would relate to those figures and the additional factor of partial remissions I do not feel it would be a productive use of staff time to calculate them.

I am sorry I cannot be more helpful.

Disability Benefits

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the Government's intentions with regard to earnings-related disability benefits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: As stated in paragraph 1.42 of volume 2 of the Green Paper on the Reform of Social Security, we will be considering further the implications of the new arrangements for invalidity benefits in the light of consultation on the Green Paper proposals.

Consultants (Private Work)

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what representations he has received regarding the alleged incidence of consultants artificially prolonging National Health Service waiting lists for hip replacement or other operations so as to encourage patients to have the operation performed privately; what action he proposes to take in response; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he is satisfied with the adequacy of the systems and controls installed in National Health Services hospitals for the identification of private patients; whether he proposes to make any changes to those systems and controls; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will make a statement about the audits carried out by his Department into the provision of private health care by consultants within the National Health Service, stating how many were carried out, what their conclusions and recommendations were and what action he proposes to take as a result;

(4) what is his policy towards the treatment of private patients by consultants within National Health Service hospitals.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Our policy is that National Health Service facilities should be available for the treatment of private patients by consultants, but private practice in the National Health Service should not prejudice the interests of National Health Service patients. The statutory requirements must be observed and private practice in the National Health Service must be conducted according to the rules. We are determined to stamp out abuse, and to ensure that arrangements for collecting income due to the National Health Service are operating effectively.

A special audit investigation in 37 health authorities last year showed that some health authorities had failed to maintain proper control. Every case of alleged irregularity that was discovered is being pursued and we shall follow up all defects reported to ensure that the health authorities concerned have rectified the inadequacies identified.

I wrote to all health authorities last December instructing them to review their systems and procedures. Regions have confirmed that so far 106 districts have completed and implemented reviews. All the remainder will have done so by September. We recognise that existing advice needs to be brought together and clarified in some respects. We will therefore be issuing revised and consolidated guidance on the management of private practice in National Health Service hospitals, and ensuring that this guidance is brought to the attention of all relevant National Health Service staff.

It is quite unacceptable for any consultants to extend waiting lists artificially so as to encourage patients to have operations performed privately. We have no evidence to suggest that the practice is widespread but would expect health authorities to investigate thoroughly any allegations they receive and to take disciplinary measures where necessary. If the waiting list in any locality for a particular operation is long we would expect the health authority concerned to investigate the causes and to find whether adequate priority is being given to that operation in NHS theatre time.

Consultants (Contracts)

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what assessment he has made of the implications for the efficiency, the provision of services and financial control by district health authorities of the contractual relationship between consultants and regional health authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The decision to retain the contracts of National Health Service consultants (other than those in teaching districts) at regional level was made at the time of the 1982 reorganisation. The reasons for the policy were explained in the debate on 11 November 1981 at columns 634-8. We have no plans to alter these arrangements at present. We do expect regional authorities to protect the interests of districts and patient services in their handling of consultant contracts.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about the terms of consultants' contracts within the National Health Service hospitals; if he is satisfied with the working of those contracts; and if he has had any recent discussions with consultants' representatives about their contracts or about the provision of private health care within National Health Service hospitals by consultants.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have no plans to revise the basis of the consultants' contract. We are in regular contact with representatives of the medical profession on the detailed terms and conditions of service of all grades of medical staff. We intend to issue revised guidance on private health care in National Health Service hospitals shortly and we are having discussions with the profession on the subject.

Orthopaedic Treatment

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many orthopaedic operations were performed by each district health authority within the Yorkshire regional health authority and what was the waiting list for orthopaedic treatment in each district health authority in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Information on in-patient waiting lists is available centrally by the specialty of the consultant but not by operation. The numbers of in-patient cases treated in the specialty of trauma and orthopaedics and the numbers awaiting admission to this specialty are given in the table. Numbers of operations are not readily available but nationally some 60 per cent. of cases in this specialty receive operations. Over half of the admissions to this specialty in the region are immediate and many of those on waiting lists already have a planned date of admission.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the incidence of hip replacement operations carried out within National Health Service hospitals both privately and on the National Health Service over each of the last three years.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not have information centrally in precisely the form requested. I shall let my hon. Friend have the available information as soon as possible.

Dental Hospitals

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if there are any plans to redevelop any dental hospitals in England and Wales; and if he will give the estimated cost in each case involved.

Mr. John Patten: A redevelopment of the Eastman dental hospital, London, is nearing completion at a cost of £3·5 million. A substantial refurbishment and re-equipping of the University of Wales dental hospital, Cardiff, has recently been completed at a cost of £1 million. We are not aware of any further planned redevelopments at present.

Efficiency Savings

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the efficiency savings achieved over the last 12 months by district health authorities which are known to his Department.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We ask regional health authorities to include in their short-term programmes plans for cost improvement in the form of summaries of district proposals—we do not require them to submit detailed information on individual district proposals. For 1984-85 regions' proposed cost improvements totalled around £100 million. They will be reporting to us by the end of June on whether their proposals have been achieved.

Nye Bevan Lodge House

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will order an inquiry into the running of the Nye Bevan lodge house in Southwark.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 16 May 1985, c. 222]: We are concerned about Nye Bevan lodge and certain other residential homes run by Southwark and I have written to the chairman of the borough's social services committee suggesting that the Department's social services inspectorate carry out a short programme of inspections of its residential homes. The purpose of this programme would be to re-establish confidence in the council's administration of these homes. This would be in addition to the inquiries which the council is itself conducting.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Costa Rica and Nicaragua

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what criteria are used to determine the current level of aid to (a) Costa Rica and (b) Nicaragua; and what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the proposal from the European Economic Community for an increase in aid to Nicaragua.

Mr. Renton: A number of factors are taken into account, including available resources, relative wealth and aid from other donors. In the case of Costa Rica a large part of our bilateral aid is used to support the Central American school of husbandry, a regional institution. There is no European Community proposal for an increase in aid to Nicaragua. We support an increase in Community aid to Central America as a whole. Detailed proposals are now being considered.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Trial Delays

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Attorney-General what is the average time defendants committed for trial in the Northern Ireland courts wait before their case is heard; and what is the corresponding figure for each year to date since and including 1969.

The Attorney-General: Statistics in the form requested by my hon. Friend have only been collected since 1979 when my right hon. and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor became responsible for the administration of the courts in Northern Ireland.

The average time between committal for trial in the Northern Ireland courts and arraignment is currently 11 weeks. The corresponding figures for each year since 1979 are as follows:

	Weeks
1979	13
1980	8
1981	8
1982	9
1984	11

The interval between arraignment and the commencement of the trial proper varies from one week to, in exceptional cases, over two years depending on the complexity of the case and the availability of counsel of the defendant's choice.

Cartmel and Furness Local Plan

Mr. Franks asked the Attorney-General if, pursuant to the answer of 4 June, Official Report, column 113, he was consulted by the Director of Public Prosecutions before the Director reached his decision not to prosecute in connection with allegations of attempted bribery and corruption in connection with the Cartmel and Furness local plan; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I was not consulted by the Director of Public Prosecutions.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Nuclear Installations (North-West)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list and decribe the steps taken by his Department pursuant to recommendation 10 of the report of the advisory group chaired by Sir Douglas Black on the incidence of cancers in the vicinity of nuclear installations in the north-west of England.

Mr. MacGregor: My right hon. Friend's responsibility for authorising the disposal of radioactive waste is shared with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, and I have nothing to add to the reply he gave to the hon. Member yesterday.

Pesticides

Mr. Ashdown asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps to ensure that the advisory committee on pesticides is wholly independent in its membership from the agrochemical industry.

Mrs. Fenner: Great care is already taken to ensure that the chairman and members of the advisory committee on pesticides, and its scientific sub-committee, are independent of all sectional interests, including the agrochemical industry.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will describe the content and occasions of a declaration of interest being required of a member of the advisory committee on pesticides; and if he will publish the declarations of interest made by the present members;

(2) whether the declarations of interest required of a member of the advisory committee on pesticides cover research work commissioned or funded by agrochemical companies or trade associations at laboratories under the control or direction of the member; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: On appointment to the advisory committee on pesticides members are required to read and sign the following declaration:

"I have no commercial interest which might make it undesirable for me to receive confidential trade information included in Advisory Committee papers. I also undertake to inform the Department of Education and Science should I acquire such an interest in the future.

I will not divulge the commercial proposals of the firms and confidential experimental data contained in such papers to those outside the Advisory Committee on Pesticides and its Subcommittees."

It is intended that when the committee becomes a statutory body members will continue to be asked to sign a declaration of independence from commercial pesticide interests. We are reviewing the text of the declaration with our legal advisers.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is satisfied that, throughout their service, present and past members of the advisory committee on pesticides, having a connection with an agrochemical company or trade association have maintained a level of objectivity consistent with their status as committee members; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: I am not aware that any past or present members of the advisory committee have, while serving the committee, been connected with an agrochemical company or trade association.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is satisfied with the range of expertise of the membership of the advisory committee on pesticides; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: I am satisfied that the range of expertise of the current advisory committee on pesticides is appropriate for the duties presently laid upon it. In view of the proposals to extend the existing safety screening system to include efficacy and humaneness, we are reviewing the composition of the committee to see if additional experts will be required for the future.

Cereals

Mr. Body asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will give a list of the privately owned stores in Lincolnshire where the intervention board has arranged to hold wheat at any time in the last 12 months for more than seven days.

Mr. MacGregor: During the last 12 months stocks of intervention wheat have been held in the following commercial stores in Lincolnshire:

Ancaster
Boston
Colsterworth
Gainsborough (2)
Grantham
Heighington
Horncastle
Ingham
Lincoln (2)
Navenby
Skegness
Sleaford
Swinderby

Mr. Body asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many tonnes of wheat are held by the intervention board at the last convenient date.

Mr. MacGregor: On 31 May there were 3·2 million tonnes of wheat in intervention stores in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Body asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the maximum number of tonnes of (a) wheat, (b) barley and (c) other cereals held by the intervention board in privately owned stores.

Mr. MacGregor: Maximum intervention stocks of wheat, barley and rye, respectively, held in commercial stores in the United Kingdom, have been 2·9 million tonnes (May 1985), 900,000 tonnes (January 1983) and 300 tonnes (February 1981).

Veterinary Advisory and Research Facilities

Mr. Hicks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the future provision of his Department's veterinary advisory and research facilities in Devon and Cornwall, with specific reference to any changes in their functions, responsibilities and location.

Mr. Jopling: As I said in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Tiverton (Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop) on 15 April 1985, I have accepted the main thrust of the recommendations of the recent efficiency study of the veterinary investigation service which bear on the functions and responsibilities of this service. As regards location, the recommendation that the veterinary investigation centres at Starcross and Truro should be replaced by a new centre at Launceston is the subject of one of a number of cost appraisals now being carried out. When I have the results of these appraisals and I have completed consideration of the views of the outside interests which have been submitted, I will make a further announcement.

Laboratories (Research Budgets)

Mr. Warren asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which laboratories within his Department, or within bodies for which he is responsible, have had their research budgets reduced in the current financial year; what is the financial value of the reduction; what is this figure expressed as a percentage of the total work carried out in the laboratory; and which of the laboratories for which he is responsible are being considered for privatisation.

Mr. Jopling: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Parliamentary Questions (Rota)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will seek to amend the rota for oral questions in such a way that questions to the right hon. Member answering for the Church Commissioners and questions to the Paymaster General share a block of 10 minutes every three weeks, with each alternating in priority over the other.

Mr. Biffen: At this stage in the Session such alterations as my hon. Friend suggests are best left until the summer recess, when the current Session's arrangements will in any event be assessed with a view to preparing next year's questions roster. I shall, however, give due consideration to my hon. Friend's suggestions.

WALES

Bi-lingual Nursery Education

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many children under the age of five years in Wales receive bi-lingual nursery education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: The information is not collected centrally.

Chief Nursing Officers

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many chief nursing officer posts in health authorities in Wales have been abolished; if he will list them in the Official Report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: None, though the roles of chief administrative nursing officers in Wales, in common with those of other chief officers, will not necessarily remain unchanged following the introduction of the general management function.

"All Wales Strategy for Elderly People"

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales when his Department will publish the report of the "All Wales Strategy for Elderly People".

Mr. Wyn Roberts: We hope to publish a consultation paper on the care of the elderly in Wales later this summer.

Dysentery

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many people in Wales suffered from dysentery in each of the years from 1979 to 1984, inclusive; what is the latest figure for 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The number of cases of dysentery formally notified in Wales in each year since 1979 is as follows. The number of original notifications received in 1985 up to and including the week ending 7 June was 275. These notifications may be subject to correction.

Cases of dysentery formally notified in Wales

1980	42
1981	46
1982	48
1984	134

Pre-school Education

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of the relevant age groups of Welsh children currently receive pre-school education in each Welsh county; and what was the percentage for 1979, 1980 and 1984, respectively.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: The numbers of full-time and part-time pupils aged under five years of age at maintained nursery and primary schools, expressed as a percentage of the total three and four-year-olds age group, are as follows. Figures for 1984 are the latest available.

Per cent.

	1979	1980	1984
Clwyd	57	59	72
Dyfed	61	62	64

Jobs and Factory Closures

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) job losses, (b) job gains and (c) factory closures there have been in Wales in the first five months of 1985; and how many there were in each case for the first five months of 1984.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Information is not available in the form requested.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Systime plc (Exports)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he intends to take any action in relation to the attempt to place exports from the United Kingdom by Systime plc under the control of a foreign power; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: The export of goods from the United Kingdom by any company is subject to control by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry under United Kingdom law as set out in the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1981, as amended.

Aid and Trade

Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the projects that the United Kingdom companies have undertaken with support from the aid and trade provisions since 1979.

Mr. Channon: The projects that United Kingdom companies have undertaken with support from the aid and trade provision since 1979 are as follows:

Trade Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the adjustments made for tariffs in arriving at the figures in column 2 of table S-3 of the annual supplement number 6 to the monthly review on external trade statistics.

Mr. Channon: The adjustment factors (multiplicative) are:

	Adjustment factors (multiplicative)
1970	0·996
1971	0·999
1972	0·998
1973	1·002

1981	0·999
1982	0·999
1983	1·000

Note: The factors are related to the current base year (1980); those prior to 1978 have been rescaled from 1975 = 100.

Japan

Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations have been made on behalf of Her Majesty's Government to Japan within the last 12 months on the subject of non-tariff trade barriers, including its continued requirement involving the LD50 test on certain goods ; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: The Government welcome and encourage the replacement of LD50 tests by other forms of acute toxicity test wherever possible. Over the last year, Ministers have on several occasions made clear their wish to see the early removal of Japanese non-tariff trade barriers.

Viscose (Imports from India)

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, in the light of the proposed closure of the viscose plant of Courtaulds plc. at Greenfields, he will make representations to the EEC Commission for the urgent introduction of tariffs and for quotas on imports of viscose from India.

Mr. Channon: No. There were no imports from India last year of viscose staple fibre and tow (the product produced at the Courtaulds viscose plant at Greenfield).

Tourism

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many tourists visited Britain (a) in each year since 1981 and (b) in 1985 to date.

Mr. Norman Lamont: This information was published in the article on pages 450 and 451 of British Business, 7 June 1985.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the financial contribution to the economy of the tourist industry in each of the past three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The tourist industry had a turnover of over £10 billion in 1984, making it one of the United Kingdom's most important industries. It is estimated that in 1983 around 1 million jobs were supported, directly and indirectly, by expenditure on tourism. Estimates of expenditure by overseas residents while in the United Kingdom, and expenditure on domestic tourism in Great Britain are as follows:

	*Expenditure by overseas residents in United Kingdom £ millions	†Expenditure on domestic tourism in Great Britain £ millions	Total £ millions
1982	3,168	4,500	7,668
1983	3,651	5,350	9,001

The survey is designed to cover all trips away from home lasting one night or more by British people for all purposes except boarding and semi-permanent education. The figures do not, therefore, cover expenditure on day-trips.

British Steel Corporation

Mr. Duffy asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to receive the British Steel Corporation's corporate plan; and when it will be published.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Now that the effects of the miners strike can be assessed, BSC has resumed its normal corporate planning processes, and it will submit a plan to the Government as soon as it has completed it. I have no plans to publish it.

Laboratories (Research Budgets)

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which laboratories within his Department have had their research budgets reduced in the current financial year; what is the financial value of the reduction; what is this figure expressed as a percentage of the total work carried out in the laboratory; and which of his laboratories are being considered for privatisation.

Mr. Butcher: None of my Department's laboratories have had their research budgets reduced in this financial year and none are currently being considered for privatisation.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Books and Periodicals

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the average expenditure on books and periodicals per student in university libraries and the comparable figures for each year since 1978-79 in (a) cash terms, (b) real terms using 1984-85 prices, (c) using an index of 100 for 1978-79 and (d) in real terms taking into account the retail prices index for books.

Mr. Brooke: The average expenditure on books and periodicals per student in university libraries is as follows:

Academic year	Cash per student £	*Real terms £	Index of col. 2	Using RPI† January 1985 prices £
1978-79	55·40	96·3	100·0	123·1

Nursery Education

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the age participation rate in education for the under-fives expressed as a percentage of the two, three and four-year-old age group.

Mr. Dunn: The percentages of children aged two, three and four years in England in January 1984 attending maintained nursery and primary schools were 4 per cent., 30 per cent. and 73 per cent. respectively.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science why the number of nursery schools has been reduced between 1980 and 1984.

Mr. Dunn: Local education authorities have discretion as to the form and extent of provision they make for under fives. The 5 per cent. reduction in the number of nursery schools between 1980 and 1984 has been more than offset by a 17 per cent. increase in the number of primary schools with nursery classes and overall numbers of pupils attending nursery schools or classes either full or part time, have increased by 20 per cent. Among the possible reasons for this, nursery classes are often considered to offer more effective links with continuing primary education and are less expensive to establish and maintain than separate nursery schools; falling rolls have offered opportunities for economical adaptation of surplus primary accommodation appropriately for this purpose; and distribution of nursery education in classes at a number of primary schools will often make it more readily accessible than if the same number of places were concentrated in a single nursery school.

School Books and Equipment

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the present per pupil expenditure on books and on equipment in (a) primary schools, (b) special schools and (c) secondary schools; and what are the comparable figures for each of the last five years, in cash terms and real terms using 1984-85 prices and using an index of 100 for 1979-80.

Mr. Dunn: The average expenditure per pupil by local education authorities in England, in cash and in 1984-85 real terms, on books and equipment in each of the five years to 1983-84, the latest year for which actual figures are available, is set out in the table.

Per Pupil Expenditure—England

	Primary				Secondary				Special
	Cash Terms £	Index	Real Terms £	Index	Cash Terms £	Index	Real Terms £	Index	Cash Terms £	Index	Real Terms £	Index
					Books
1979-80	4·6	100	7·0	100	7·7	100	11·7	100	6·8	100	10·4	100

1983-84	15·7	162	16·4	111	29·1	155	30·4	106	59·6	169	62·3	116

The expenditure in 1984-85 real terms has been calculated using the gross domestic product (market prices) deflator.

Professional Association of Teachers

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how he proposes to ensure that members of the Professional Association of Teachers are to be involved in consultation on superannuation issues.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend is required to consult representatives of local education authorities and of teachers and of such other persons as appear to him to be appropriate before making regulations under the Superannuation Act 1972. Because the teachers superannuation working party does not include all relevant interests, my right hon. Friend does not regard its deliberations as fulfilling his duty and accordingly he consults separately with the Professional Association of Teachers and certain other bodies not represented on the working about proposed new and amending regulations.

Medical Research Council

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the level of financing of the Medical Research Council.

Mr. Brooke: The information which follows supplements my answer of 14 February to the hon. Member's earlier question on this subject, at column 221.

The level of financing of the Medical Research Council for the years 1981-82 to 1987-88 is set out in the table which shows (i) the Medical Research Council's grant-in-aid for the years 1981-82 to 1985-86 and the amounts provisionaly recommended by the Advisory Board for the Research Councils for 1986-87 and 1987-88, in cash terms; and (ii) the Medical Research Council's grant-in-aid expressed as a percentage of the science budget.

	MRC's grant in aid	Science budget
	Cash terms £ million	Cash terms £ million	MRC Per cent.
1981-82	101·7	451	22
1982-83	107·5	482	22
1983-84	113·7	516	22
1984-85	117·2	550	21
1985-86 (estimated)	122·3	584	21
1986-87 (provisional)*	125·0	599	21
1987-88 (provisional)*	128·3	613	21

*Subject to revised advice by the ABRC later in 1985 (for 1986-87) and in 1986 (for 1987-88).

Research

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science which laboratories within his Department, or within bodies for which he is responsible, have had their research budgets reduced in the current financial year; what is the financial value of the reduction; what is this figure expressed as a percentage of the total work carried out in the laboratory; and which of the laboratories for which he is responsible are being considered for privatisation.

Mr. Brooke: Although the Department does not directly support any laboratories, my right hon. Friend is responsible for allocating grant-in-aid to the five research councils. Within the sums available to them, it is for the councils to decide on the level of funding for their laboratories, institutes and units, taking into account their overall scientific priorities.

I understand that in cash terms the allocations for 1985-86 (including capital as well as recurrent in some cases) fall short of the outturn figures for 1984-85 as shown in the table:

Research council	Total institutes, units, and laboratories	Number where there is a cash shortfall
AFRC	28	8
MRC	58	None
NERC	13	3
SERC	4	3

There is no meaningful way of comparing the cash amounts as between one year and another, or of expressing the reductions as percentages of the work carried out. This is because the figures conceal, variously, the effects of major capital programmes nearing completion, variations in income for commissioned research, and fluctuating foreign currency exchange rates.

I am not aware that the councils have any specific plans for privatising any of their laboratories.

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will detail the number, percentage and value of alpha grants rejected by each research council responsible to his Department, listing the data for each council separately for the financial year 1984-85.

Mr. Brooke: The information for the Agricultural and Food Research Council, the Natural Environment Research Council and the Science and Engineering Research Council is listed for the financial year 1984-85:

	Research Council
	AFRC	NERC	SERC
Number of alpha-rated grants rejected	93	115	517
Number rejected as percentage of all alpha-rated grant applications	47	47	24
Value of unfunded alpha-rated grants	*	*	*

*Not available, because not all the successful alpha-rated grant applications were funded to the extent requested by the applicant.

The Economic and Social Research Council no longer categorises research grant applications into alpha and other categories.

The Medical Research Council gears its award years to academic years, and hence its figures for 1984-85 will not be available until August. In the academic year 1983-84, the MRC rejected 199 (29 per cent.) alpha-rated applications.

Mr. Madel asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what allocations have been made under the selective scheme he announced on 12 November 1984 to improve laboratory and equipment provision in university centres of research.

Sir Keith Joseph: I understand that the University Grants Committee, after taking account of advice from a selection committee chaired by the president of the Royal Society, has decided to allocate the £4 million of additional equipment grant available for the financial year 1985-86 to the following research groups:

Professor E. Ash, Electronic and Electrical Engineering, University College, London	439,000
Professor A. R. Battersby, Organic Chemistry, Cambridge	472,000
Professor T. L. Blundell, Protein Engineering, Birkbeck College	545,000
Professor W. J. Brammar, Biochemistry, Leicester	366,000
Professor A. Broers, Engineering, Cambridge	463,000
Professor R. J. Donovan, Physical Chemistry, Edinburgh	326,000
Professor A. R. Fersht, Chemistry, Imperial College, London	440,000
Sir Peter Hirsch, Metallurgy, Oxford	451,000
Professor R. Parsons, Electrochemistry, Southampton	403,000

In addition, an interim grant of £95,000 will be made jointly to Professors M. D. Lilly and P. Dunnill, chemical and biochemical engineering, University College, London.

Financial Management Initiative

Mr. Madel asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will place in the Library a report on his Department's response to the financial management initiative; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph: I have today placed in the Libraries of both Houses copies of a report "The Financial Management Initiative: Response of the Department of Education and Science". This report outlines the Department's objectives, its top management system and arrangements for policy review and development, its financial management information system and related cost centres, the measures being taken to improve value for money within the education service, the development of performance measures in education, and the available specialist personnel and training programmes.

High Energy Particle Physics (Report)

Mr. Madel asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has yet received the report of the review group into United Kingdom participation in high energy particle physics; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph: The review group, under the chairmanship of Sir John Kendrew has now reported to the chairmen of the Advisory Board for the Research Councils and the Science and Engineering Research Council. I am arranging for copies of the report to be placed today in the Libraries of both Houses. I expect advice from the SERC and the ABRC on this subject later this year.

Higher Education

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will estimate the reduction in (a) the number and (b) the percentage of arts and humanities student places in higher education required to achieve a net increase in the output of science and engineering graduates of (i) 1 per cent. (ii) 100 and (iii) 1,000 assuming that student numbers and expenditure on higher education remain constant overall for (x) higher education as a whole, (y) polytechnics and (z) universities.

Sir Keith Joseph [pursuant to his reply, 10 June 1985, c. 338-40]: The information there provided was not in the form indicated in the question. The information in that form is as follows:

		Hypothetical estimated reduction in total number of arts and humanities places
		Across All Higher Education (Great Britain)	In Universities (Great Britain)	In the Public Sector of Higher Education (Great Britain)
To achieve a 1 per cent. rise in the output of science (excluding medicine) and engineering graduates	Nos (000s)	2·05	1·38	0·67
	Per cent.	0·9	1·2	0·6
To achieve a rise of 100 science graduates	Nos	180	180	180
	Per cent.	0·1	0·2	0·2
To achieve a rise of 1,000 science graduates	Nos	1,760	1,760	1,760
	Per cent.	0·7	1·5	1·5

Notes:

Figures assume that the average recurrent cost of teaching provision in science (excluding medicine) and engineering is 40 per cent. greater than the cost of arts and humanities (that is all other subjects) provision in each sector. An overall wastage rate of 15 per cent. has been assumed. No allowance is made for any differences in wastage rates or in average course lengths between subject areas or between sectors, nor for the transitional costs of switching provision between subject areas. The calculations take no account of future movements in graduate output already projected under present plans. The first column assumes equal proportional change in each sector. All figures relate to full-time student places only.

ENERGY

Nuclear Installations

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the different stages of decommissioning and dismantling a civil nuclear power station installation.

Mr. Goodlad: The operations involved in the management and dismantling of redundant nuclear facilities are now generally termed decommissioning. A standard terminology has been adopted by the International Atomic Energy Agency to describe three main stages in decommissioning nuclear facilities, namely:

Stage 1 A minimum series of operations to remove major sources of radioactivity from the facility and make it safe. Continued and long-term routine surveillance and inspection is required.

Stage 2 Reduction of the main structure to the minimum possible size and removal of all equipment.

The residual structure would be sealed off to prevent access and subjected to periodic surveillance and inspection.

Stage 3 Complete dismantling of the plant and site clearance for unrestricted use.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the progress of decommissioning and dismantling (a) the Dounreay fast reactor and (b) the Windscale advanced gas-cooled reactor; and how many years will elapse in each case before clearance to a green field state.

Mr. Goodlad: Stage 1 of the Dounreay fast reactor decommissioning programme will be completed in about one year. All the secondary circuit sodium—potassium alloy coolant has been removed, treated and disposed of and all radioactive facilities outside the containment sphere, with the exception of the fuel storage pond, have also been dismantled and removed. There are no firm plans at present to take decommissioning beyond stage 1.

Defuelling of the Windscale AGR was completed in 1983. Preparations for decommissioning the reactor and associated nuclear plant, including the heat exchangers, are now in an advanced stage of planning and will start in 1989. Current plans envisage clearance of the site to stage 3 by 1995; non-radioactive facilities and services buildings will be retained for future use. The project is being undertaken as a demonstration which will provide valuable experience in support of the decommissioning of reactors in the UK civil nuclear power programme.

Laboratories (Research Budgets)

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for Energy which laboratories within his Department, or within bodies for which he is responsible, have had their research budgets reduced in the current financial year; what is the financial value of the reduction; what is this figure expressed as a percentage of the total work carried out in the laboratory; and which of the laboratories for which he is responsible are being considered for privatisation.

Mr. Peter Walker: Department of Energy funding of nuclear R and D carried out by the United Kingdom atomic Energy Authority is estimated at £189·6 million (cash) for 1985-86, compared with £196·2 million (cash) in 1984-85. This reduction of £6·6 million represents under 2 per cent. of the total work expected to be carried out by the authority in 1985-86; it will be made up in part by increased contributions from the electricity generating boards. There are no plans to privatise the authority.

Questions about the R and D programmes of the nationalised energy industries are for the chairmen of those industries.

EMPLOYMENT

Job Release Scheme

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Employment for what reasons delivery of new application forms for the job release scheme to jobcentres in the Manchester area is being delayed.

Mr. Alan Clark: Application forms to join the scheme before 1 August 1985 have been available from all jobcentres since late March. The application procedure for those applying to join on or after 1 August has been simplified so that they need apply only three weeks before their proposed start date, and not eight weeks as at present. Thus, under the new procedure, applications need not be submitted until 11 July for those wanting to join the scheme on 1 August. Application forms will be available in jobcentres within the next week.

Enterprise Allowance

Mrs. Rumbold asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will extend the enterprise allowance to married women who wish to start up a new business.

Mr. Alan Clark: The rules of the scheme make married women eligible on the same basis as all other applicants.

Agricultural Inspectorate

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Employment what amount, expressed in pounds sterling and as a percentage of total spending, was expended on the Health and Safety Executive's Agricultural Inspectorate in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Alan Clark: The figures available are:

Year	Total spending on the Health and Safety Executive £000s	Agricultural Inspectorate budget £000s
1984-85	90,360	3,411
1983-84	85,668	3,342
1982-83	80,228	3,291
1981-82	72,580	2,746
1980-81	69,918	2,454
1979-80	55,877	2,008

The Agricultural Inspectorate's budget covers expenditure and salaries and so on, travel and subsistence, permanent transfer expenses, and training and conferences. It does not include spending on common services, such as premises costs, research, information services, capital building and equipment and so on.

Farm Safety Inspectors

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of farm safety inspectors in each of the last 10 years and the most current figure.

Mr. Alan Clark: Responsibility for farm safety was transferred to the Health and Safety Commission in 1977. Numbers of agricultural inspectors in post at 1 June each year were:

	Number
1977	190
1978	188
1979	190
1980	185
1981	176
1982	165
1983	159
1984	154
1985	161

Pesticides

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received in the last five years, regarding the banning of the chemical 2,4,5-T; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: A number of representations advocating the banning of the chemical 2,4,5-T have been received in the last five years. They included those from the trades unions such as "How Many More" produced by the Agricultural and Allied Workers National Trade Group. All such representations are considered in detail by the Government's Advisory Committee on Pesticides. The committee considerwd the latest evidence on the safety of phenoxy acid herbicides, which include 2,4,5-T, in 1982.

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what research his Department has conducted into the possible harmful effects of the chemicals 2,4.5-T and 2,4-D;

(2) what international research is available to his Department on the possible harmful effects of the chemicals 2,4,5-T and 2,4-D.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Advisory Committee on Pesticides published an initial review on the safety of the herbicide 2,4,5-T in March 1979 and later reviews in December 1980 and January 1983. The reviews take account of national and international research including investigations carried out by the Health and Safety Executive. Copies of the reports are in the House of Commons Library. The Health and Safety Executive continues to keep in touch with national and international research on this topic.

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has had alleging possible harmful effects of the chemical 2,4-D.

Mr. Alan Clark: A number of representations have been received about the possible harmful effects of phenoxy acid herbicides, which include the chemical 2,4-D. All such representations are considered in detail by the Government's Advisory Committee on Pesticides.

ENVIRONMENT

Structure Plans

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to announce his draft modifications into the north-east Hampshire structure plan and to publish the report of the panel which conducted the examination in public into that plan.

Mr. Macfarlane: My right hon. Friend intends shortly to publish proposed modifications to the submitted alteration to the north-east Hampshire structure plan, together with the report of the panel which conducted the examination in public.

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the House Builders Federation in connection with the stage 1 alterations into the north-east Hampshire structure plan subsequent to the completion of the examination in public on 6 July 1984; and whether he intends to take those representations into account in the draft modifications he proposes to make to the plan.

Mr. Macfarlane: My right hon. Friend received no representations about the alterations from the House Builders Federation following the examination in public.

He is aware that, in the week following the examination, the House Builders Federation wrote to the chairman of the panel who, in the last session on housing issues, had offered to take account of any further, written comments from participants on circular 15/84 which was published during the examination.

My right hon. Friend is considering the panel's report.

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he received the report of the panel which conducted the examination in public into the north-east Hampshire structure plan held between 3 and 6 July 1984 at Farnborough, Hampshire.

Mr. Macfarlane: The report was received in my Department on 26 October 1984.

Water Supplies (Nitrates)

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the occasions on which his group of experts on nitrate in water have met; and what action they have proposed should be taken.

Mr. Macfarlane: The nitrate co-ordination group has met four times so far: 14 January, 12 March, 19 April and 10 June. There have also been meetings of subgroups. Further meetings are planned and the group will be preparing a report later this year.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has approved any exemption from the European Economic Community directive on nitrate concentration in drinking water.

Mr. Macfarlane: No decisions have yet been taken on any applications for derogations from the maximum nitrate concentration set down in the EC directive relating to the quality of water intended for human consumption.

Defective Housing

Mrs. Rumbold asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the guidelines to owners and occupiers of homes that fall within the definition of the Housing Defects Act 1984.

Mr. Gow: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastleigh (Sir D. Price) on 13 June 1985 at columns 524-25.

Orlit Houses

Mr. Nelson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance he is giving to local authorities on the payment of reinstatement grants for the repair of Orlit houses without their being approved under the method of repair scheme being discussed between his Department, the National Housing Building Council and the Building Societies Association.

Mr. Gow: Before local authorities can give a reinstatement grant for the repair of any type of house designated under the Housing Defects Act, they must be satisfied, among other things, that the repaired house would be likely to be mortgageable in the private sector. The scheme arranged by the National House Building Council is intended to provide an assurance that building societies will be prepared to lend, subject to their usual conditions, on houses repaired according to methods approved under that scheme. But there is nothing to prevent an authority seeking similar assurance from private sector lending institutions direct, in respect of any method of repair.

Heysel Stadium, Brussels

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the report by the Greater London council on the condition of the Heysel stadium, Brussels, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Macfarlane: I have yet to receive a copy of this report. I shall write to the hon. Member when I do.

Rating Revaluation

Mr. Charles Morrison asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment has been made of the likely effects on the property valuation for rating purposes at county level in England and Wales of a rating revaluation for the class of the property on the Inland Revenue return CVR 7140.

Mr. Waldegrave: No assessment on a county by county basis has been carried out.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many replies he received to his letter of 17 April regarding discussions with the Government about the mechanics of abolition of the Greater London council; and if he will place copies of those replies in the Library.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have nothing to add to my reply to the hon. Member on 14 June at column 574.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to ascertain whether, in the event of the Greater London council being abolished, the London boroughs could assume responsibility for the Greater London council renovation programme to its transferred housing stock from 1 April 1986, without that programme being disrupted.

Sir George Young: It will be primarily for the boroughs to ensure that the renovation programme continues without disruption. For their part, the Government will ensure that the boroughs receive the housing investment programme (HIP) allocation that would otherwise have gone to the GLC for works to the transferred stock. The boroughs have been invited to include provision for the responsibilities they are to assume in their HIP bids for 1986-87. Also the Government have undertaken to ensure that the broad financial effect of the GLC's obligatory revenue deficit payments is maintained through rate support grant. We are currently considering the responses to consultation on the proposed arrangements.

As referred to in my answer to the question by the hon. Member for Norwood (Mr. Fraser) on 17 June 1985, at column 20, the Government will be moving an amendment to the Local Government Bill which will provide for the residuary bodies to take a positive role in seeking the view of boroughs and districts on whether those bodies should take on any specialist teams temporarily while long-term arrangements are being finalised. This would include the renovation teams.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the reply of 13 June, Official Report, column 523, why he does not intend to exercise any control over the expenses of preparatory committees of successor authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Because this is a matter for the authorities concerned to decide.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answers of 13 June, Official Report, column 522, if he will take steps to ascertain which individual members of the Greater London council and metropolitan county councils have accepted membership of preparatory committees of successor authorities and which individual members of the Greater London council have been approached with a view to becoming members; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: No.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the reply of 13 June, Official Report, column 523, what guidance he intends to issue to the preparatory committees of successor authorities concerning party political balance.

Mr. Waldegrave: None.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the reply of 13 June, Official Report, column 523, what he is doing to ensure that his Department's estimates of costs and savings following the proposed abolition of the Greater London council are kept up to date.

Mr. Waldegrave: I see no need to update the broad estimates given in the answer my right hon. Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Surbiton (Mr. Tracey) on 30 November 1984 at column 611. This made it clear that the precise extent of savings will depend on decisions to be taken by the successor bodies.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the reply of 13 June, Official Report, column 523, what are his criteria for appointing shadow chairmen of the residuary bodies; if any people have already been approached; how the names are coming forward; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Enfield, Southgate (Mr. Portillo) on 5 June at columns 163-65.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 13 June, Official Report, column 523, what account he intends to take of candidates' political affiliations when appointing shadow chairmen of the residuary bodies.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I do not regard this as a determining factor. We shall appoint the best man—or woman—for the job, regardless of political affiliation.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the reply of 13 June, Official Report, column 523, if he will publish in the Official Report the borough councils which have received information from his Department secured by him under section 5 of the Local Government (Interim Provisions) Act 1984.

Mr. Waldegrave: All 32 boroughs and the common council of the city of London have received such information.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the machinery for approaching potential members of preparatory committees of successor authorities.

Mr. Waldegrave: This is a matter for the authorities concerned.

Mr. Roger King asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the Government's proposals for the administration and servicing of the outstanding debt of the Greater London council and the metropolitan county councils following their abolition.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: On 16 November 1984, at columns 376-78, in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Bury, North (Mr. Burt), I set out the Government's revised proposals for the handling of debt following representations received on our White Paper "Streamling the Cities" (Cmnd. 9063). After further consultations with the local authority associations and individual authorities I can now confirm that these proposals will form the basis for the administration and servicing of the outstanding debt of the Greater London council and the metropolitan county councils following abolition.

Local Government (Grant Penalties)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the reply of 13 June, Official Report, columns 524-5, what representations, and from whom, he has received concerning the disregarding of transitional costs incurred by London authorities for the purpose of assessing grant penalties in 1985-86; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend has received various representations concerning these costs including a number from London borough councils.

Local Government Expenditure

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the 30 local authorities with the lowest percentage increase, or decrease, in their budgeted current expenditure in 1985-86 compared with 1981-82, showing also the change in their rate or precept in the same period.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: Following is the available information obtained from English local authorities (1981-82—revised budgets; 1985-86—budgets):

30 Authorities with the Lowest Percentage increases in budgeted current Expenditure between 1981-82 and 1985-86

Steel-framed Houses

Mr. Norris asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposes to take to assist private owners of steel-framed houses who face difficulties because of the reluctance of some building societies to lend on properties of this kind.

Mr. Gow: I have seen reports that in some cases building societies are reluctant to lend on the security of steel-framed houses, although this is by no means always the case. These houses are among the types of non-traditional dwellings built mainly by public authorities. Although there are some isolated reports of the frames of these houses being corroded, there are other reports of them being found in excellent condition. On the basis of present information I see no reason why building societies should be unwilling to lend on steel-framed houses generally provided they are surveyed properly. I appreciate that, because of their non-traditional construction, building societies and their surveyors may find it difficult to establish the condition of property and I have asked the building research establishment to prepare advice on the inspection, maintenance and repair of the various types of steel-framed house. The first of a series of papers on this subject will be published later this year.

Urban Programme

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money has been allocated for the urban programme holiday project for 1985. What expenditure has been agreed in Yorkshire and Humberside; and how both programmes compare with equivalent expenditure in 1984.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 17 June 1985, c. 23]: Approvals for holiday play schemes under traditional urban programme circular 25 (1985/86) totalled £400,000, of which £32,000 were for schemes in Yorkshire and Humberside. Corresponding figures for 1984-85 were £855,000 and £74,000. There was a 10 per cent. reduction in total resources for the traditional urban programme, with new money falling by half because of the high level of existing commitments. Resources for partnership and programme authorities were not reduced.

NHBC Repair Scheme

Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is now in a position to specify when the first approvals for repairs will be given under the National Housing Building Council scheme for PRC houses; when he expects the first repairs to be completed; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 17 June 1985, c. 22-23]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend gave the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker) on 7 May at columns 299-300.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Life Sentence Prisoners

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of inmates at present serving life sentences in prisons in the United Kingdom; and what numbers are classed in the following categories A, B and C.

Mr. Mellor: According to the records held centrally, which are approximate, on 31 March 1985 about 2,040 persons in prison department establishments in England and Wales were serving life sentences, including custody for life and detention during Her Majesty's pleasure or for life under section 53 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933. About 195 of these prisoners were in category A. Only adult males are allocated to other security categories; those adult males held in local prisons or closed category B training establishments numbered about 1,400 on 31 March; and those held in closed category C training establishments numbered about 200.

Thorp Arch Remand Centre

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what facilities for teaching and training are available in the Thorp Arch remand centre.

Mr. Mellor: Education facilities are provided in a new purpose-built education centre staffed by a full-time education officer, two full-time teachers and 13 part-time teachers. Tuition is currently provided for 47 weeks a year in a wide range of subjects including basic literacy and numeracy, life skills, art and design, technical drawing and mathematics. A library located in the education unit with a stock of approximately 4,000 books is regularly available to inmates.

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he plans any building work at the Thorp Arch remand centre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend announced in his reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Keighley (Mr. Waller) on 5 June, at columns 157-58, that the role of the remand centre at Thorp Arch was to be changed to that of a category C prison. Consideration is at present being given to any building work necessary as a result of this change of role.

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what training facilities for staff are needed for the conversion of Thorp Arch remand centre into a category C prison.

Mr. Mellor: Existing facilities are sufficient for the governor to be able to offer the training necessary to prepare his staff for the conversion of Thorp Arch remand centre into a category C prison.

Greenham Common (Detained Persons)

Mr. Barnett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set up an inquiry into the treatment of persons by the police while in detention after their arrest at Greenham common on 25 May, following representations from the hon. Member for Greenwich.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No. If any of the detained people wish to make a complaint about their treatment by the Thames Valley police it is open to them to do so through the normal procedures. The detained people were arrested and taken to Reading police station by the Ministry of Defence police and questions about their treatment in the course of this are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence, to whom I have referred the hon. Member's representations.

Prisoners (Payment Rates)

Mr. Maclean asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the payment rates for prisoners in Her Majesty's prisons and the levels of and reasons for pocket money, including the figures currently being received by Mr. Peter Sutcliffe.

Mr. Mellor: Moneys paid to inmates of Her Majesty's prisons relate to the work performed. No other payments are made. The current rates of earnings are contained in prison department circular instruction No. 41/1984, a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Peter Sutcliffe is a patient in the special hospital at Broadmoor, which is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services.

Cartmel and Furness Local Plan

Mr. Franks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, pursuant to the answer of 4 June, Official Report, column 130, he will now call for a report from the chief constable of Cumbria as to the circumstances in which Chief Superintendent Taylor of the Cumbria police released to the Westmorland Gazette on 31 May details of the investigations into allegations of attempted bribery and corruption in connection with the Cartmel and Furness local plan; and if he will make a statement as to the substance of the report.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No, but the chief constable of Cumbria confirms that Chief Superintendent Taylor spoke briefly to a representative of the press on 31 May after the Director of Public Prosecutions had decided not to proceed with this case.

European Cup Final (Offences)

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for reports from the chief constable of Merseyside and from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to progress with their inquiries into allegeged criminal offences in connection with the disaster at the Liverpool v. Juventus European Cup Final in Brussels on 25 May; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The police investigation is aimed at identifying English football supporters who are suspected of criminal offences in the Heysel stadium and then interviewing them in order to obtain evidence on which extradition proceedings might be based. I understand that these inquiries, which are being carried out in close co-operation with the Belgian authorities, are unlikely to be completed for some weeks, but the Department is keeping in close touch with their progress.

Football Violence

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what evidence is available to him of any correlation between the incidence of violence at football grounds and the presence at those grounds of representatives of extremist political organisations or parties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: It is difficult to measure the effect which the presence of political extremists has on the level of crowd violence, but we do not rule out the possibility that this is a contributing factor. We hope that anyone with evidence that political extremists are inciting or organising violence, whether at football grounds or elsewhere, will draw it to the attention of the police.

Children (Offences)

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many children were charged with offences relating to sections 32, 33 and 34 of the Offences Against the Persons Act 1861 for (a) Billericay petty sessional area, (b) Essex and (c) England and Wales for each of the past five years;

(2) how many children were charged with offences relating to sections 35 and 36 of the Malicious Damage Act 1861 for (a) the Billericay petty sessional area, (b) Essex and (c) England and Wales for each of the past five years;

(3) how many children were convicted of offences relating to sections 32, 33 and 34 of the Malicious Damage Act 1861; and what was the average sentence for (a) the Billericay petty sessional area, (b) Essex and (c) England and Wales for each of the past five years;

(4) how many children were convicted of offences relating to sections 35 and 36 of the Malicious Damage Act 1861; and what was the average sentence for (a) the Billericay petty sessional area, (b) Essex and (c) England and Wales for each of the past five years;

(5) in what percentage of cases of children convicted under sections 35 and 36 of the Malicious Damage Act 1861 compensation orders were made against parents for (a) the Billericay petty sessional area, (b) Essex and (c) England and Wales for each of the past five years;

(6) in what percentage of cases of children convicted under sections 32, 33 and 34 of the Offences Against the Persons Act 1861 compensation orders were made against parents for (a) the Billericay petty sessional area, (b) Essex and (c) England and Wales for each of the past five years;

(7) how many children were cautioned under sections 35 and 36 of the Malicious Damage Act 1861 by (a) Essex police and (b) the British Transport police for each of the past five years; and what percentage of these resided in south-east Essex;

(8) how many children were cautioned under sections 32, 33 and 34 of the Offences Against the Persons Act 1861 by (a) Essex police and (b) the British Transport police for each of the past five years; and what percentage of these resided in South-East Essex.

Mr. Mellor: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Prisoners (Suicides and Injuries)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many inmates have attempted suicide in prison in the current year to date and in each of the past five years.

Mr. Mellor: The information readily available is as follows:

Year	Number of inmates who have committed suicide	Number of inmates who have attempted suicide
1980	26	Not available
1981	21	Not available
1982	22	Not available
1983	26	212
1984	26	390÷
1985*	16

* To 17 June 1985.

÷ 1984 and first three months of 1985. The reporting period for collection of these statistics has recently been altered from the calendar to the financial year. In the transition, figures are readily available only for the 15 months 1 January 1984 to 31 March 1985.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many detainees attempted or committed suicide whilst in custody within the Metropolitan police area in each of the past five years and to date.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Information on the number of suicides whilst in police custody in the Metropolitan police area during the period in question is contained in the appropriate annual reports of the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis. No such suicides have been reported this year to date. Information on the number of attempted suicides is not available.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many self inflicted injuries had been recorded as being inflicted during imprisonment or detention at Her Majesty's prisons or detention centres; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The information readily available relates to 1983 onwards and is as follows:

Self-inflicted injuries at Prison Department Establishments*

Year	Prisons†	Detention centres	Total
1983	990	22	1,012
1984 and first 3 months of 1985‡	1,357	25	1,392

* Self-inflicted injuries are defined as those injuries requiring medical treatment and include those with apparent suicidal intent.

† Prisons: includes youth custody centres and remand centres.

‡ The reporting period for collection of these stastistics has recently been altered from the calendar to the financial year. In the transition, figures are readily available only for the 15 months 1 January 1984 to 31 March 1985.

PRIME MINISTER

Rural Poverty and Deprivation

Q84. Mr. Wigley asked the Prime Minister if she will set up an interdepartmental committee to investigate the incidence and degree of rural poverty and deprivation.

The Prime Minister: No. The Development Commission in England, the Development Board for Rural Wales and the Highlands and Islands Development Board in Scotland have a statutory duty to keep all matters of economic development and social well-being under review and to advise the Government. In addition, the Welsh and Scottish Development Agencies have a general responsibility for economic development, which includes the rural part of their areas.

Hospital Consultants

Q89. Mrs. Renée Short asked the Prime Minister what action she intends to take on the recent report of the Comptroller and Auditor General on the need to appoint a higher proportion of consultants to junior doctors.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Lady to the reply given to her by my right hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Health on 3 June, at column 102.

European Community Expenditure

Q92. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she is now satisfied with the operation of the strict budgeting control of Common Market spending agreed at the Fontainebleau Council of Ministers.

The Prime Minister: Yes. Budget discipline first applies to the Community's budget for 1986 and to decisions taken in 1985 affecting that budget. The financial guideline for agricultural expenditure in 1986 has been playing an important part in the current price fixing negotiations; and the ECOFIN Council is preparing to fix the reference framework for the 1986 budget.

Public Trustee

Mr. Harris asked the Prime Minister which Minister has responsibility for monitoring the performance of the Public Trustee and for assessing whether the Public Trustee gives value for fees charged to those clients who are required to use his services.

The Prime Minister: The Lord Chancellor has ministerial responsibility for the Public Trustee. The Public Trustee is an independent statutory corporation and, like any other trustee, is responsible to the beneficiaries of each trust of which he is trustee for administering the trust competently and in accordance with the relevant law. In case of any failure to do so, recourse may be had to the courts. The Public Trustee's Office is self-financing: he is required by statute to set his fees at a level sufficient to cover the cost of the service he provides.

Nurses (Pay)

Mr. Deakins asked the Prime Minister what benefits in kind are available to National Health Service nurses; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The following benefits in kind are currently available under the terms of nationally negotiated agreements:

(i) Accommodation charges — students, pupils and other nurses under age 22 receive an automatic reduction of 40 per cent. of their charges, at present worth over £300 per annum per person.

(ii) Meals—all nursing staff have a right of access to meals within National Health Service facilities at subsidised prices.

Nurses who are required to wear uniforms receive them free and have them laundered at the expense of the health authority, but we regard this as the consequence of a condition of service rather than a benefit in kind.

Police (Pay)

Mr. Deakins asked the Prime Minister what benefits in kind are available to members of the police; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Under the Police Regulations 1979 every police officer must be provided by the police authority with free accommodation or paid a rent allowance in lieu. Some NHS medical, dental and optical charges are reimbursed. Most officers are provided with uniforms. Meals in police canteens are subsidised.

Engagements

Mr. Parry asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 18 June.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 18 June.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 18 June.

Mr. Pike asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 18 June.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today.

Sharelga (Sinking)

Mr. Hoyle asked the Prime Minister what was the position of the Irish trawler Sharelga when she was sunk in 1982; what was the precise date and time of the sinking; what was the name of the submarine involved; when compensation was paid; and how much the compensation was.

The Prime Minister: The Irish trawler Sharelga sank on 18 April 1982, some 30 miles east of Dublin. The Coastguard at Anglesey picked up a distress call just after 12.30. A Royal Navy submarine was involved, but, for reasons of operational security, no further details can be given.

The Ministry of Defence has accepted liability for the incident and agreed to pay fair and reasonable compensation. Agreement has yet to be reached on the final sum. The amount of compensation is a matter for negotiation between the vessel's owners and the Ministry of Defence.

Middle East

Mr. Latham asked the Prime Minister whether she will outline any new steps which Her majesty's Government intend to pursue to advance the peace process in the middle east.

The Prime Minister: It remains my view that the primary responsibility for progress lies with the parties directly concerned. We shall continue to encourage and support all constructive proposals through our contacts with the parties and with the United States.

Legal Minimum Wage

Mr. Nellist asked the Prime Minister if, following her answer, Official Report, 4 June, column 149, she will list the sources of the evidence showing the setting of a legal minimum wage leading to increased unemployment.

The Prime Minister: Evidence can be found in the following:

1. OECD Occasional Study 1983 "Effects of the Minumum Wage on the Youth Labour Market in North America and France" by J. Martin.
2. Low Pay Unit Pamphlet No. 50 "From the Dole Queue to the Sweatshop" by H. Neuberger.
3. Institute of Economic Affairs, Hobart Paper No. 101, "Low Pay or No Pay".
4. Department of Employment Research Paper No. 51 "Pay and Employment in four Retail Trades" by C. Craig and F. Wilkinson.
5. Department of Employment Research Paper No. 52 "Wage Floors in the Clothing Industry 1950-1981" by P. Morgan, D. Paterson and R. Barrie.
6. Journal of Economic Literature 1982, "Effect of the Minimum Wage on Employment and Unemployment " by Brown et al.
7. Government Economic Service, Working Paper No. 52, March 1982, "Wages and Employment in Agriculture, England and Wales, 1960-80" by P. J. Lund et al.
8. In its Economic Outlook, published at the beginning of this month, the OECD argues that:

"The need to reduce barriers to adjustment in labour markets is well recognised. Regulations intended to protect workers from possible job loss inhibit the creation of new jobs in high risk activities; and high minimum wages restrict employment openings and opportunities to upgrade skills especially among the young. Despite this recognition there has been insufficient progress in these areas in the last year".

Social Security Review

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Prime Minister (1) if the illustrative figures to be published in the autumn with the White Paper on social security will include an updating of the table in paragraph 3.32, page 15, of the housing benefit review report, showing the distribution of gains and losses in housing benefit as a result of the proposed changes;

(2) if the illustrative figures to be published in "The Reform of Social Security" White Paper will include a statement of possible national and local office budgets for the social fund;

(3) if the the illustrative figures to be published in "The Reform of Social Security" White Paper will include details of how many will gain, or lose, and by how much, as a result of the family credit proposals;

(4) the illustrative figures to be published in "The Reform of Social Security" White Paper will include details of the possible rates, subject to inflation, of the new income support allowances for pensioners, the sick and disabled and the unemployed (a) under 25 years and (b) over 25 years and single parents.

The Prime Minister: I have said that we will publish illustrative figures showing the effects of the Green Paper proposals in the autumn once the main structure is settled. The figures will include the effects on individuals and expenditure. They will cover a range of assumptions: as I have explained before, the final effect cannot be known until the April 1987 benefit rates are settled.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Northern Ireland (Civil Servants)

Mr. McCusker asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many civil servants are employed by United Kingdom Government Departments in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hayhoe: On 1 January 1985, 5,167 staff of the Home Civil Service (Inland Revenue, Ministry of Defence, Customs and Excise, PSA, the Northern Ireland Office and small numbers of staff in other Departments) were employed in Northern Ireland.

I understand from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland that on 1 January 1985, 26,005 Northern Ireland civil servants were employed in Northern Ireland in the Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Departments, together with 3,068 staff of the Northern Ireland prison service.

These figures relate to both industrial and non-industrial staff and are expressed as full-time equivalents.

Sinclair Research

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to assistance provided by the Bank of England in efforts to provide financial help to Sinclair Research; and what sums of public money are or might be involved.

Mr. Peter Rees: The Bank of England is providing no finance, but its good offices are always available to assist in such circumstances.

EC Economic and Finance Council

Mr. Leigh asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the meeting of the European Community Economic and Finance Council in Luxembourg on 11 June.

Mr. Peter Rees: I represented the United Kingdom at this Council.

The Council discussed the economic situation, in particular, profitability, investment and employment in the Community. Work on these issues will continue, and the Council will send an interim report later this month to the Milan European Council.

There was a discussion on the further development of the European monetary system. The President of the Council will send a progress report to the President of the European Council. Work in the Monetary Committee and Committee of Central Bank Governors will continue, particularly on the development of both the private and official ecu.

The Council discussed the procedure for applying budget discipline to the 1986 Community budget. The Italian and Luxembourg presidencies will make arrangements for a meeting with the European Parliament at an early date prior to the Council fixing the reference framework for 1986, in accordance with the Council conclusions of 4 December 1984.

The Council agreed on a package of increases in travellers' allowances, from 1 October 1985 (with certain derogations for some member states). The main changes are as follows: the value element of travellers' allowance of intra-Community tax-paid goods will rise from 280 ecu (about £160) to 350 ecu (about £200); the intra-Community tax-paid still wine allowance will be increased from 4 to 5 litres; the tax exemption for small consignments sent between private citizens in the Community will rise from 70 ecu (about £40) to 100 ecu (about £60); and duty-free admission of fuel in bus tanks will be up to a maximum of 600 litres. The Council also agreed on a regular adjustment of allowances to maintain their real value.

The Council reached a common position on the 20th VAT directive, which concerns special national aid for German farmers to be paid through the VAT system and which was agreed in principle as part of the Fontainebleau package. The Council also discussed the proposed UCITS ("unit trust") directive, and work on this will continue.

Social Security Review

Mr. Roger King asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make a statement about the tax treatment of the revised widow's benefits proposed in the Green Paper. "Reform of Social Security", Cmnd. 9517.

Mr. Moore: Yes. The proposed lump sum benefit of £1,000 payable to widows immediately on bereavement will be exempt from tax. Widow's pension and widowed mother's allowance, where payable, will be liable to tax, as they are at present.

European Community (Legislation)

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether there is any material, other than the annexes to the letter sent by the Commissioners of Customs and Excise to the European Commission on 28 December 1977, copies of which have now been placed in the Library, pursuant to his earlier answer, Official Report, 4 June, column 115, which an individual would need to have to know his right and obligations under the directly applicable legislation of the European Communities.

Mr. Barney Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 17 June 1985; c. 29]: In the United Kingdom, Community VAT legislation has been implemented through the Value Added Tax Act 1983 and secondary legislation. The effects of this United Kingdom legislation are explained in a series of VAT public notices and leaflets published by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise.

Johnson Matthey Bankers

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Bank of England first indicated to the company its concern about the financial circumstances of Johnson Matthey Bankers.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 17 June 1985 c. 29]: I understand that the Bank of England's supervision of Johnson Matthey Bankers will be dealt with in the bank's annual report, which will be published very shortly.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Cup Final

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will instruct Her Majesty's ambassador in Belgium to seek to obtain a copy of the forthcoming report of the inquiry by the Belgian Government into the incidents at the Heysel stadium, Brussels, on 29 May; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: A Belgian parliamentary commission of inquiry on the Heysel tragedy is due to deliver a report by 6 July. Her Majesty's embassy in Brussels will be in close touch with the Belgian authorities on this.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will instruct Her Majesty's ambassador to Italy to seek to obtain from the Italian authorities such information as may be available about progress in apprehending persons involved in alleged criminal offences in connection with the disaster at the Heysel stadium, Brussels, on 29 May; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: No. The primary responsibility for this rests with the Belgian authorities. I understand from my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary that the Belgian police authorities are in close touch with the Merseyside police, who are giving every assistance.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who is the planning authority for the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Renton: The planning authority for the Falkland Islands is the Executive Council of the Falkland Islands Government.

Entry Visas

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many entry visas were granted in each of the past four years and to date.

Mr. Renton: Details of the number of entry clearances issued for the United Kingdom are maintained on an annual basis. Figures for the past four years are as follows:

Year	Number
1981	604,837
1982	554,862
1983	576,634
1984	602,068

Scottish Highlands and Islands

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made by Her Majesty's Government to the European Commission concerning the status of the Scottish Highlands and Islands in future assessments of the social and economic situation and development of various regions of the European Community.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I have been asked to reply.

Following consideration of the regional analysis contained in the European Commission's second periodic report, published in March 1984, we have secured the Commission's agreement that the Highlands and Islands will be treated as a separate level II region in any future analysis of the social and economic development of the regions of the Community.

SCOTLAND

Workers' Co-operatives

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of (a) registered workers' co-operatives and (b) community co-operatives in Scotland at the latest available date; how many people are employed in these co-operatives; and how the figures compare with the previous year.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The latest figures available to the Industry Department for Scotland indicated that approximately 134 Scottish co-operatives have been registered. Of these, it is estimated that 68 are workers' co-operatives and 66 community co-operatives or community businesses, employing approximately 600 and 1,400, respectively.

These figures are not collected on a regular basis. The current figures compare with 43 workers co-operatives and 39 community co-operatives or community businesses, employing 363 and 931, respectively in November 1984.

Redundancies (Dundee)

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total number of notified redundancies in the Dundee jobcentre area in 1984; and how many new jobs were created in the city during the year.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Comprehensive information on redundancies and new jobs created is not available. In 1984, 2,034 redundancies affecting 10 or more workers were notified to the Manpower Services Commission as due to occur in the Dundee jobcentre area. There have been 318 new jobs, and 99 safeguarded jobs, associated with offers of selective financial assistance under section 7 of the Industrial Development Act 1982 made to projects in the city of Dundee district in 1984. Many jobs are also created without such assistance.

Prisoners (Suicide)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many inmates attempted or committed suicide (a) in prison or in detention centres and (b) in police custody in each of the past five years and to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The information for prisons and detention centres is as follows:

	Suicide	Attempted Suicide
1980	1	8
1981	3	9
1982	3	4
1983	6	5
1985 (to 17.6.85)	5	12

Two persons committed suicide while in police custody in the period concerned, one in 1980 and the other in 1983. Information about each is given in the annual reports of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary for Scotland for these years. Statistics of cases of attempted suicide while in police custody are not maintained centrally.

TRANSPORT

A1 (Roadworks)

Mr. John Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to ensure that, during the road maintenance works to be carried out around junction 8 of the M1 between 2 and 16 July, any work which might impede traffic flow on the A1 between Baldock and London is suspended for the same period.

Mrs. Chalker: The contractor responsible for the A1(M) Roestock-Stanborough scheme at Hatfield has been instructed to keep two lanes open in each direction on the dual-carriageway section. There will be a change in junction layout at Roehyde on the single-carriageway section, but this is not expected to cause additional delays to traffic. There will be no other roadworks on A1 between Baldock and London during this period.

M2 (Road Widening)

Mr. Moate asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give urgent consideration to widening the existing two lane M2 motorway from the Medway bridge, at least to the A249 access; what studies have been undertaken in this connection; and if he will give an indication of present traffic flows in relation to design capacity.

Mrs. Chalker: We are at present undertaking a study of the possible need for more capacity on M2 between junctions 1 and 3 where there are particular problems relating to a combination of traffic and gradient. We are also looking at the junction with the A2 at Brenley Corner. For the present the M2 is adequate in other areas, but we shall continue to monitor it. The present traffic flows vary from section to section. In 1984 the estimated flows between junctions 3 and 5 ranged from 27,000 to 37,000 compared with a design flow of between 32,000 and 55,000. The figures quoted are for vehicles in 24-hour average annual day.

M1 (Telephones)

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will ensure that, when his officials check the telecommunications system at Leicester Forest East service station on the south-bound carriageway of the motorway, they pay particular attention to telephones currently out of order, in particular Nos. 392143 and 392147.

Mr. Ridley: Yes. I am drawing the motorway service area operator's attention to the right hon. Gentleman's question.

Fishermen (Fatalities)

Mr. Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many fishermen were lost at sea in each year from 1979.

Mr. David Mitchell: The latest figures for the number of deaths at sea on fishing vessels from all causes since 1979 are as follows:

Year	Number of deaths
1979	36
1980	22
1981	25
1982	15
1983	25

British Rail (Bicycles)

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Transport if when he next meets the chairman of British Rail he will raise with him the reason for a charge being levied for the carriage of bicycles on weekdays on inter-city 125 trains.

Mr. David Mitchell This is a matter for BR. My hon. Friend may wish to take it up with the chairman direct. I understand that BR makes charges for the carriage of bicycles on some inter-city 125 trains because they have very limited luggage space.

Railway Accident (Nuclear Waste)

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the circumstances surrounding the accident to a train carrying nuclear waste at Stratford goods yard on 9 May.

Mr. David Mitchell: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 17 May 1985.

Fishing Vessels (Casualties)

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the number of total losses and serious casualties to fishing vessels of any nationality in water surrounding the British Isles over the last 10 years which were, or are presumed to have been, attributable to the activity of submarines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: In the period 1974 to 1983, 408 United Kingdom registered fishing vessels were described in my departmental records as total losses and 117 as serious casualties. In the same period, eight total losses and 74 serious casualties were investigated by my Department on foreign registered fishing vessels. Information about serious casualties attributable to or presumed to be attributable to the activity of submarines is not stored in my Department's statistical data and could be extracted from such detailed records as now exist only with disproportionate cost. However, information published annually by my Department does mention unusual causes of losses to United Kingdom registered fishing vessels and there is no reference to any loss in this period resulting from the action of submarines.

Laboratories (Research Budgets)

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for Transport which laboratories within his Department have had their research budgets reduced in the current financial year; what is the financial value of the reduction; what is this figure expressed as a percentage of the total work carried out in the laboratory; and which of his laboratories are being considered for privatisation.

Mr. Ridley: My Department has only one research laboratory, the Transport and Road Research Laboratory (TRRL) at Crowthorne. Provision for TRRL has not been reduced in the current year. I am keeping the scope for increasing private sector participation in transport and road research under continuing review, but I have no plans to privatise the laboratory.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Kinsale Gas

Mr. Archer asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, following the decision not to use Kinsale gas, what the additional cost of providing full compensation to all gas consumers in Northern Ireland would be, including compensation for the restoration of damage following the removal of gas pipes and the cost of redecoration; and what estimate he has made for the conversion of public buildings to alternative fuels following the decision not to use Kinsale gas.

Dr. Boyson: The cost of the gas conversion assistance scheme is estimated at £20 million. The additional cost of extending to industrial and commercial consumers the full least-cost conversion or replacement grant payable to domestic consumers is estimated at approximately £4 million.

In disconnecting consumers from supply it is not the existing practice of the industry to remove pipes and fittings on private property once they have been purged and made safe. In the absence of detailed information on existing gas appliances and individual assessments of the impact of conversion on each dwelling, it is not possible to provide any estimate of the cost of redecoration.

The estimate for the conversion of public buildings to alternative fuels, following closure of gas undertakings, is £9·75 million.

Gas Industry

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish in the Official Report the reasons which led him to reject the rescue plan for the Northern Ireland gas industry produced by the Northern Ireland gas employers board and gas trade union group joint working group.

Dr. Boyson: The rescue plan proposed by the gas industry joint working group did not provide the basis for a viable gas industry. The capital and operating costs in the plan were seriously underestimated and it failed to overcome the price and market problems which led to cancellation of the Government's own Kinsale project last September.

Prisoners (Suicides)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many inmates attempted or committed suicide (a) in prison and (b) in police custody in each of the past five years and to date.

Mr. Scott: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Lear Fan Company

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the estimated value of each of the major facilities and specialist pieces of equipment for which grant aid was paid to the Lear Fan Company at the Newtownabbey factory.

Dr. Boyson: Under the various agreements, Lear Fan Ltd. claimed, and the Government provided, about £3·6 million of grant assistance towards the purchase of equipment and modifications to facilities at Newtownabbey.

The Lear Fan factories at Newtownabbey are owned by the Government. The various specialist pieces of equipment which were grant-aided form part of the company's assets over which the Government has a charge. The value of these assets will be assessed in due course by the receiver.

Terrorism

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table in the Official Report to show (a) how many firearms, by type, namely, handguns, rifles, shotguns or fully automatic weapons, were seized by the security forces in Northern Ireland in each year since 1969; and in each year and for each type how many were legally held weapons stolen by terrorist organisations from (i) civilians, (ii) the Royal Ulster Constabulary, (iii) the Royal Ulster Constabulary Reserve, (iv) the Ulster Special Constabulary, (v) the Ulster Defence Regiment and (vi) the regular Army.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 12 June 1985, c. 480]: Information is not readily available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Such information as is available about weapons which have been recovered or stolen is given in the following tables:

	1969	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975	1976	1977	1978	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	Totals

SOCIAL SERVICES

Family Credit

5. Mr. Penhaligon asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information the Minister envisages an employee will have to give to his employer in order to be eligible for the family credit, as set out by the Green Paper "Reform of Social Security", (Cmnd. 9517).

Mr. Newton: Under the proposals in the Green Paper, claims for family credit will be made direct to the DHSS by the employee. If the claim is successful the DHSS will inform both the employee and the employer of the amount to be paid. I do not envisage that an employee need give his employer any other information about the claim.

Social Security Review

15. Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will publish the Green Paper, "Review of Social Services".

Mr. John Patten: We hope to publish the consultation paper later this year.

23. Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about the social security review.

24. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations he has received about the Green Paper "Reform of Social Security".

36. Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations he has so far received relating to his reform of social security Green Paper from voluntary organisations; and if he will state the number broadly favourable to his proposals.

43. Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about his proposals for widows with children in his plans for reforming the social security system.

45. Mr. Loyden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about the proposed provision for those people on social security to meet special needs in Cmnd. 9518 "Reform of Social Security".

49. Mr. Nelson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received in support of his proposal to ensure that the new system of income support reduces any incentive to remain unemployed.

53. Mr. Hayes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations he has received since the publication of his Green Paper, "Reform of Social Security"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about the effect of his plans for the reform of the social security system on the unemployment trap.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what reaction he has received following the publication of his Green Paper, "Reform of Social Security".

Mrs. Roe asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about the effect on those retiring in the last 25 years of this century of his proposals for the abolition of the state earnings related pension scheme.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friends and the hon. Members to my right hon. Friend's reply earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, North (Mr. Thompson).

25. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what estimates have been made by his Department of the costs of implementing the Green Paper proposals for the reform of the social security system.

Mr. Newton: Detailed estimates cannot be made until decisions on the future structure of social security have been taken in the light of comments on the Green Paper.

27. Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about his Department's progress on the computerisation of social security recorded in the Green Paper, "Reform of Social Security", Cmnd. 9518.

Mr. Newton: The Green Paper plans for the computerisation of social security build on our 1982 consultative document "Social Security Operational Strategy—A Framework for the Future". A considerable number of representations were received from staff, trade unions, members of the public, other interested bodies and hon. Members. Since then we have received further representations from time to time from hon. Members and various other sources. We have held detailed discussions with the departmental trade unions on the implementation of the local office microcomputer project and agreement on its introduction has now been reached.

28. Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the cost to his Department of the social security reviews.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown) yesterday at column 41.

34. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what estimate he has made of the public sector manpower implications of the social security proposals he announced on 3 June.

Mr. Newton: A firm assessment of the manpower implications must await decisions on the new structure of social security to be taken in the light of comments on the Green Paper. It is, however, expected that the proposed simplifications, together with the Department's plans for computerisation, will both make the system less staff-intensive and at the same time give staff better, more varied and more satisfying jobs.

35. Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whom he will consult about the proposals in the forthcoming Green Paper on social services.

Mr. Newton: The Green Paper makes it clear that anyone is welcome to send in comments on the proposals. We have specifically invited views from a number of bodies, such as pensions organisations and local authority associations.

51. Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will undertake not to publish the Green Paper on social services during the summer recess.

56. Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will announce the publication of the Green Paper on social services at the joint social services conference in October.

Mr. John Patten: We are not yet in a position to give a precise date for the publication of this paper.

52. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has reduced the spending plans for his Department for 1987-88 in the light of the Green Paper "Reform of Social Security."

Mr. Newton: Detailed spending plans for 1987-88 can be settled only when decisions on the new structure of social security have been taken in the light of comments on the Green Paper proposals.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all the payments made to individual members of the social security review teams, either in the form of expenses or fees.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 22 May 1985, c. 470]: Payments for fees and for reimbursement of expenses totalling just over £18,000 were made to members of the review teams, under the normal Civil Service rules applicable to individuals who are assisting Ministers in the work of their Departments. Details of payments made to particular individuals for this purpose are not normally made public.

Mr. John asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he has made any estimate of the likely rate of take-up of help from the social fund with funeral costs; (2) if he has made any estimate of the proportion of (a) births and (b) deaths which will qualify for help from the social fund with maternity and funeral costs, respectively.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 12 June 1985, c. 487]: The social security Green Paper gives a broad outline of the groups we plan to help with maternity and funeral expenses. We shall be considering the precise definitions of these groups in the light of comments received on the Green Paper. Until then it would be premature to estimate the number of payments which are likely to be made in each category. More people will benefit from these payments than do so under the present single payments regulations. Provisional figures for 1983 suggest that 171,000 single payments were made for maternity and 11,000 for funeral expenses in that year.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list those individuals or organisations who received expenses for giving oral evidence to the social security reviews, and the cost involved.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 22 May 1985, c. 470]: A small number of individuals who gave oral evidence to the review teams were reimbursed for their travelling and other necessary expenses in accordance with the normal Civil Service rules for meeting such expenses. Details of the sums paid to individuals are not normally disclosed.

Attenborough Report

19. Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what consideration has been given by his Department to implementing those parts of the Attenborough report on the arts and disabled people which are his departmental responsibility; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I received a copy of the committee's published report on 28 May and attended its launch in London on 29 May. The report contains a number of wide-ranging recommendations on this interesting and important topic. We will be giving careful consideration to those which are relevant to this Department's responsibilities.

Surplus Hospital Land

21. Mr. Norris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he is satisfied with the progress being made by regional health authorities to sell off surplus hospital land.

Mr. John Patten: There is room for improvement and much more to be done, but we are satisfied that progress is being made.

Southwark

22. Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations or information he has received in the last three years on the subject of the working of the social services department in the London borough of Southwark, particularly in relation to the care of children and the elderly.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave yesterday to my hon. Friend the Member for Crawley (Mr. Soames).

Estate Management

26. Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he is able to estimate the financial gains to the National Health Service of changes in estate management in the National Health Service.

Mr. John Patten: Health circular (83)22, which contained Ministers' response to the recommendations of the report of the inquiry into surplus and underused land in the NHS, requires health authorities to undertake a programme of tasks leading to a rationalisation of the estate which is fully integrated with service planning needs. Sales of surplus NHS land totalled £31·5 million in 1983-84. It is expected that this figure will be matched and exceeded in subsequent years and that substantial revenue savings will also be achieved. More precise estimates are not available at this stage. This exercise is being given greater impetus by the recent appointment of Mr. D. N. Idris Pearce as part-time property adviser to the NHS management board.

Drug Prescribing

29. Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he is now able to announce details of an appeal system to deal with specific cases where a general practitioner believes it necessary to prescribe a drug to a particular patient which is no longer available under the National Health Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Brent, South (Mr. Pavitt) on 13 May at columns 34-35.

Pharmaceutical Service Negotiating Committee (Contract)

30. Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he is satisfied that the new contract drawn up between the Government and the Pharmaceutical Services Negotiating Committee will lead to a better service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Yes, we are confident that the new contract for NHS community pharmacists which has been negotiated between the Government and the pharmaceutical services negotiating committee will lead to a better service for the public and satisfy the interests of the profession and the taxpayer. It will enable the National Health Service to make the best possible use of pharmacy. We also believe that the new contract represents a firm foundation on which the practice of pharmacy in the National Health Service can be developed.

The main features of the new contracts are:

a remuneration structure that will provide better incentives to efficient and cost-effective pharmacy in the National Health Service;

a system of annual negotiations and annual cost inquiries and a fixed settlement date of 1 April each year;

new arrangements under which family practitioner committees will only admit new contractors where the public and the service would benefit from the extra services; improved help to essential small pharmacies in rural areas;

the basis for developments in the professional role of pharmacies following discussion of the report of the Nuffield inquiry which is expected later this year.

Home Help Service

31. Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to phase out the home help service.

Mr. John Patten: No.

Homeless Families (Accommodation)

32. Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has recently visited a bed and breakfast establishment which houses homeless families.

Mr. Whitney: I have visited a number of such board and lodging establishments in recent months.

Child Care Law

33. Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many responses he has received to his Department's discussion document on child care law.

Mr. John Patten: Forty-nine responses have so far been received by the inter-departmental working party on child care law to its discussion documents.

Elderly Persons (Care)

37. Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will include the question of financial support by his Department for private residential and care homes for the elderly in his eventual plans for rationalisation of the welfare state.

Mr. Whitney: The Green Paper "Reform of Social Security" contains no proposals for changes to the system of financial support to residents in private residential care homes for the elderly. We shall, however, keep this aspect under consideration in the light of our monitoring of the new board and lodging regulations which came into effect in April and the outcome of the consultations on the Green Paper.

Disabled People

38. Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what new plans his Department has for ending discrimination against disabled people.

Mr. Newton: The Government's approach rests on a wide range of positive measures to promote wider understanding of the needs of disabled people and to promote greater opportunities for them. The Government have continued to do this both through legislative means and through efforts to increase awareness of disabled people's abilities. Recent examples are the amendment to the Building Regulations to ensure adequate access for disabled people in certain new buildings, which comes into force this August; and the code of good practice on the employment of disabled people, launched last November by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister.

Nursing and Midwifery Staff (Pay)

39. Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will now make a statement about the report of the pay review body for nursing and midwifery staff.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's statement on 6 June, at columns 194-96.

Supplementary Benefit and Residential Care (Report)

40. Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about the report on supplementary benefit and residential care by a joint central and local government working party in 1985.

Mr. Whitney: We are at present considering this report and shall in due course be discussing it with the local authority associations.

Social Security Management Board

41. Mr. Cockeram asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he estimates he will be setting up the social security management board; and who he envisages will be the members.

Mr. Fowler: The board will be set up as soon as possible. It will consist of the senior official managers in the Department, with outside members with relevant management experience of running large businesses, particularly those providing financial and personal services. The names of the members will be announced in due course.

Occupational Therapists

42. Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current maximum salary of an occupational therapist (senior grade 1) in the National Health Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Since 1 April 1984, the maximum salary for a grade I senior occupational therapist in the National Health Service has been £8,747 per annum. On 6 June my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister made a statement on the Government's acceptance of the report of the Pay Review Body for nursing staff, midwives, and the professions allied to medicine. This will raise the maximum of the senior I occupational therapist scale by an increase of 16·6 per cent. to £10,200 during this financial year. The increase will be paid in two stages from 1 April 1985 and 1 February 1986.

Pensioners (Earnings Rule)

44. Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what consideration was given to the relaxation of the earnings rule for pensioners in the course of the review of social security.

Mr. Newton: Consideration was given to the future of the earnings rule for pensioners during the social security review. The Government's conclusion is reported in chapter 1 of volume 2 of the Green Paper on the "Reform of Social Security" (Cmnd. 9518). Paragraph 1.69 reaffirms the commitment to abolish the earnings rule at the earliest opportunity when resources permit.

Hospital Waiting Lists

46. Mr. Neale asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he is yet satisfied with the drop in hospital waiting lists.

Mr. John Patten: Waiting lists, particularly in some areas and some specialties, are still too long, but we are making progress. At 30 September 1984 the waiting list for inpatient treatment stood at some 683,000. That is almost 70,000 less than at March 1979. It would have been lower still but for the industrial action in 1982.

Capital Expenditure

47. Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the latest estimate of the outturn of capital expenditure of his Department for the current financial year.

Mr. Fowler: Planned capital expenditure by my Department in 1985-86 is as follows:

	£ million
National Health Service	779
Social Security	68

Carers (Criminal Records)

48. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied that the social services have adequate information about relevant criminal records of those hoping to work with vulnerable people.

Mr. John Patten: We shall be in a better position to reply after we have seen the report of the review which my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department has established of the arrangements for supplying such information. I refer the hon. Member to his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Surrey, South-West (Mrs. Bottomley) on 27 March at column 247.

Integrated Tax Credit Scheme

50. Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what consideration was given to the immediate introduction of a fully integrated tax credit scheme in the formulation of his recent Green Paper on social security.

Mr. Fowler: The Green Paper makes it clear that the Government's approach was to consider the objectives of each part of the social security system and how these might best be met. That was the first priority. But the Government accept the importance of closer alignment between tax and social security where possible. The family credit scheme and the proposed move to an April uprating date are examples of this. The computerisation of the PAYE and social security systems offer new opportunities which we are examining. Further aspects of closer integration of the two systems will be considered in the Green Paper on the reform of personal income tax to be published later this year.

Death Grant

54. Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total budget of his Department in each of the last five years for which records are available; and what percentage of that budget was disbursed in death grant payments in each of those years.

Mr. Whitney: The information requested is given in the table.

Total Expenditure of the Department* (£ million)	33,314	39,667	44,520	48,002	51,632

Portable Pensions

55. Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he plans to have discussions with representatives of life assurance and pension organisations with regard to portable pensions.

Mr. Newton: My right hon. Friend has written to all member organisations of the occupational pension schemes joint working group inviting them to take part in detailed discussions with officials about the new pensions framework proposed in the Green Paper on the "Reform of Social Security." These discussions will cover arrangements for personal pensions.

Poverty

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his assessment of the extent of poverty in Britain.

Mr. Whitney: There is no generally accepted measure of poverty.

Water Rates

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total cost of meeting water rate payments for those in receipt of supplementary benefit at the latest date for which information is available.

Mr. Whitney: The information is not available in the precise form requested. The best figures available are those contained in table 6.14 of the Annual Statistical Enquiry 1982, a copy of which is in the Library. These show that the cost of including amounts for water charges in claimants' supplementary benefit assessments was about £2·5 million. This table does not give the complete picture because it excludes certain recipients affected by the partial start of the housing benefits scheme and those whose allowance for water rates is paid through housing benefit, for whom the information is not available.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people in the borough of Burnley were receiving housing benefit on the last date for which figures are available.

Mr. Whitney: The information is not available in the precise form requested. Burnley borough council's subsidy claims for 1985-86 estimate that the average number of recipients of rent rebates, rent allowances and rate rebates will be:

	Average number
Rent rebates	5,700
Rent allowances	1,550
Rate rebates	13,250

Soho Hospital for Women

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans there are for the closure of the Soho hospital for women.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Bloomsbury health authority's document "Towards a Strategy" proposes the closure of the Hospital for Women, Soho square, by 31 March 1989 as part of its long-term plans to centralise inpatient gynaecological services at University College hospital. If the authority decides to proceed with this proposal it must be subject to the usual consultation procedures and, if the closure is opposed by the Community Health Council, it will be referred to Ministers for a final decision. I understand that at its May meeting the health authority agreed to close two wards at the hospital in early June on a temporary basis pending consultation on their permanent closure.

Chief Nursing Officers

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many chief nursing officer posts in health authorities in England have been abolished; if he will list them in the Official Report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Health authorities are currently drawing up their proposals for revised management arrangements to implement the recommendations of the Griffiths report. We do not propose to issue detailed instructions to authorities as to how to meet this requirement and arrangements will vary according to local needs and circumstances. We are therefore not requiring authorities to appoint chief nursing officers. We have made it clear, however, that we expect each health authority to have a nurse adviser in a senior management position whose main responsibility is the provision of professional advice directly to the authority. The officer may, of course, combine this responsibility with other duties in support of the general manager. This full range of responsibilities of the officer will be reflected in the title of the post-holder.

Pensioners (Housing Benefit)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of pensioners in Wales are currently in receipt of housing benefit.

Mr. Whitney: It is estimated that in 1983, the latest date for which information is available, about two fifths of pensioners in Wales were receiving housing benefit.

NHS (Ancillary Staff)

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of all part-time staff employed in the National Health Service by grade and sex in the following professions (a) speech therapists, (b) clinical psychologists, (c) hospital pharmacists, (d) medical laboratory scientific officers, (e) medical physio-technicians and (f) physiological measurement technicians.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The figures requested are shown in the tables.

NHS (Radiographers)

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will break down by grade and sex the numbers of full and part-time radiographers in the National Health Service; and if he will list the full and part-time figures separately.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many cases of food poisoning which involve quick frozen food have been reported to his Department in each of the last five years.

Mr. John Patten: No cases of food poisoning of which the cause has been identified as quick-frozen food have been reported to the Department in the last five years.

Lipoflavonoid (Limited List Equivalent)

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which drug or drugs on the limited list meets the clinical need of the drug Lipoflavonoid in the treatment of Menieres disease.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Lipoflavonoid is a multi-vitamin preparation which is of no proven efficacy in the treatment of Menieres disease. An adequate range of vitamins remains available on NHS prescription for use in cases where they are clinically indicated.

Laboratories (Research Budgets)

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which laboratories within his Department have had their research budgets reduced in the current financial year; what is the financial value of the reduction; what is this figure expressed as a percentage of the total work carried out in the laboratory; and which of his laboratories for which he is responsible are being considered for privatisation.

Mr. John Patten: Information on the funding of research in 1985-86 in individual laboratories of health authorities and other bodies financed through the Department is not held centrally. No laboratories are being considered for privatisation.

Mucodyne (Limited List Equivalent)

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which drugs on the limited list meet the clinical need also met by the drug Mucodyne in the treatment of bronchial asthma and glue ear.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The advice of the chief medical officer's group of independent medical and pharmaceutical experts was that Mucodyne and other similar mucolytic agents were of no established therapeutic value and so should be removed from NHS prescription.

There is a difference of opinion within the medical profession on the value of this group of drugs in the treatment of conditions like bronchial asthma and glue ear. We are making arrangements for the committee which will review the selected list to consider these drugs at its first meeting. I shall announce details of the committee soon.

Drugs and Alcohol (Health Campaigns)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much money the Health Education Council has spent on campaigns against hard drugs and alcohol problems, respectively, in each year since 1979; and what is its planned expenditure in the current year in real terms.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 6 June 1985, c. 237]: Expenditure has been as follows:

Year	Alcohol £	Hard Drugs £
1979-80	24,842	—
1980-81	216,534	—
1981-82	194,683	—
1982-83	263,178	—
1983-84	310,671	—

For 1985-86 the Health Education Council has budgeted to spend £100,000 in support of the Government's £2 million campaign on the prevention of drug misuse, and has received a grant of up to £85,000 from the Department of Education and Science for the development of a drug education package. The council's estimated expenditure on activity concerning alcohol misuse is £400,000. In addition, the council has granted £50,000 to the teachers advisory council on alcohol and drug education.

DEFENCE

HMS Conqueror (Log Book)

57. Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of his inquiry into the disappearance of a logbook from HMS Conqueror after the Falklands war.

Mr. Stanley: I have nothing at present to add to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) on 14 February 1985, at column 287.

Trident

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence if the current estimate of Trident costs involve purchasing fewer D-5 missiles from the United States of America than the original costing of 1982.

Mr. Butler: It has been a long-standing practice, for security reasons, not to comment on the number of strategic missiles being purchased from the United States of America.

COCOM (Paris)

Mr. Faulds asked the Secretary of State for Defence if any officials of his Department, or any military or naval officers, are assigned to COCOM in Paris.

Mr. Butler: Not on a permanent basis. Ministry of Defence officials, including the occasional serving officer, attend talks in COCOM as and when considered appropriate.

War Widows

Mr. Freeman asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate the cost of providing for war widows widowed before 1973 ex gratia occupational pensions from his Department in addition to the war widow's pension they already receive.

Mr. Lee: The current additional cost would be of the order of £180 million a year, and if the war disabled were also included the annual cost would rise to some £600 million.

Training Land

Mr. Maclean asked the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the implications for public attitudes towards the Army of his proposal to purchase land for dry training at Warcop; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: I believe that the public generally accept the need to have land for military training. The appropriateness of any particular site is determined through the usual consultation with local authorities.

Mr. Maclean asked the Secretary of State for Defence if, in the event of landowners being unwilling to sell their land to his Department for dry training purposes at Warcop, he will consider leasing the land in question.

Mr. Lee: Yes.

Laboratories (Research Budgets)

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for Defence which laboratories within his Department, or within bodies for which he is responsible, have had their research budgets reduced in the current financial year; what is the financial value of the reduction; what is this figure expressed as a percentage of the total work carried out in the laboratory; and which of the laboratories for which he is responsible are being considered for privatisation.

Mr. Butler: I shall answer shortly.

RAF Alconbury

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence how much it will cost the Royal Air Force in terms of accommodation, transport and other facilities for personnel who will staff the Rapier anti-aircraft missiles guarding the American facilities at Alconbury from 1986.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 17 June 1985, c. 38]: About £250,000 in 1985-86, £240,000 in 1986-87 and £200,000 a year thereafter. These costs are offset by reduction in the research and development levy for the Trident programme under arrangements published in July 1980 (Cmnd. 7979).

HOUSE OF COMMONS

US Congress (Members' Facilities)

Mr. Sedgemore asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will place before the Services Committee a proposal that it should make a study of the level of facilities and staff provided for members of the United States Congress; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Biffen: No. I do not consider that such a study would be appropriate.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Authorities (Property Disposal)

Mr. Maples asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to give local authorities powers to enable them to dispose of their rundown estates or blocks of flats for redevelopment.

Mr. Gow: The Government wish to encourage partnership schemes of this kind and have today launched the urban housing renewal unit to assist local authorities to develop them and other initiatives to improve conditions on rundown estates. I believe that it would help authorities if powers of this kind were available to them and my right hon. Friend hopes to bring forward proposals for legislation.

Under section 34 of the Housing Act 1980 a local authority may seek possession of a dwelling let under a secure tenancy on the ground that it intends to redevelop the dwelling itself (ground 8 of schedule 4 to the 1980 Act). Before the court makes an order for possession it must be satisfied that suitable alternative accommodation will be available to displaced tenants, and the authority may make home-loss payments.

However, local authorities wishing to sell a tenanted dwelling to private developers so that the property could be renovated and brought back into use as housing under low-cost home ownership initiatives have experienced difficulties. In these circumstances, local authorities have no power either to obtain possession of the property, or to offer compensatory payments to tenants.

We hope to legislate when a suitable opportunity arises to extend the grounds for possession in schedule 4 to the 1980 Act to allow local authorities to seek possession, in circumstances approved by the Secretary of State for the Environment, on the ground that they intend to sell the dwellings to the private sector for renovation and re-use as housing. As under the existing ground 8, tenants displaced under the proposed new ground would be entitled to be offered suitable alternative accommodation and to receive home-loss payments.

We will be consulting local authority associations and others about our proposals shortly.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL FOR SCOTLAND

Football Matches (Offences)

41. Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland what has been the change in the number of court cases relating to offences at football matches since the introduction of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 1980.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: It is not possible to identify football match offences because information about the locus of an offence is not recorded.

Legal Aid

42. Mr. Maxton asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland when he intends to meet the procurators fiscal to discuss the Government's proposals for legal aid.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: I do not intend to meet procurators fiscal for that purpose.

Landlords (Prosecutions)

43. Mr. David Marshall asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland how many prosecutions have been brought over the last 12 months or are pending against landlords for (a) harassment of tenants and (b) fraud in relation to the housing benefit system.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: Precise figures are not available, but inquiries with procurators fiscal indicate that there have been approximately 20 and 15 cases, respectively.

Red Deer

44. Sir Hector Monro asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland how many prosecutions there have been for the illegal killing of red deer in the latest available year.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: Separate statistics are not kept for red deer alone. In relation to offences under the Deer (Scotland) Acts, 40 persons were proceeded against. That figure is still provisional.

SCOTLAND

"Quarterly Economic Commentary"

10. Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration he has given the latest "Quarterly Economic Commentary" of the Fraser of Allander Institute about reducing unemployment, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Allan Stewart: This is one of a number of commentaries we always read with interest.

Voluntary Organisations

11. Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the value of grants from his Department to voluntary organisations in each of the last three years at constant prices.

Mr. John MacKay: The Department made grants to voluntary organisations in cost terms of £109·8 million in 1981-82; £127·7 million in 1982-83; and £132 million in 1983-84. Figures for 1984-85 will not be available until the appropriation accounts for that year are finalised.

Rates

12. Mr. Gourlay asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the estimated total amount of rate rebate claimable in 1985-86 in respect of properties in the Kirkcaldy district council area, under the provisions of the Rating (Revaluation Rebates) (Scotland) Bill.

Mr. Younger: The Convention of Scottish Local Authorities has advised me that Fife region as rating authority is likely to pay £969,000 in revaluation rate rebates in 1985-86, but it has made no estimate of the apportionment among properties in different districts. The hon. Gentleman may wish to seek this information from Fife regional council.

24. Mr. Ewing asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total amount to be given in rate relief under the terms of the Rating (Revaluation Rebates) (Scotland) Bill to ratepayers in Central region; and of that amount how much will be paid to ratepayers in the area of Falkirk district council.

Mr. Ancram: The Convention of Scottish Local Authorities has advised me that Central region as rating authority is likely to pay £1·24 million in revaluation rate rebates in 1985-86. But it has made no estimate of the apportionment among properties in different districts. The hon. Member may wish to seek this information from Central regional council.

30. Mr. Eadie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total amount to be given in rate relief under the terms of the Rating (Revaluation Rebates) (Scotland) Bill to ratepayers in Lothian region; and of that amount how much will be paid to ratepayers in the area of Midlothian district council.

Mr. Ancram: The Convention of Scottish Local Authorities has advised me that Lothian region as rating authority is likely to pay £5·509 million in revaluation rate rebates in 1985-86. But it has made no estimate of the apportionment among properties in different districts. The hon. Member may wish to seek this information from Lothian regional council.

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he can give any estimate of the number of lock-up garages in Scotland which will be eligible for rating relief in terms of the Rating (Revaluation Rebates) (Scotland) Bill; and what total sum is likely to be paid out to this category of ratepayer in the year 1985-86;

(2) if he can give any estimate of the number of poster sites in Scotland which will be eligible for rating relief in terms of Rating (Revaluation Rebates) (Scotland) Bill; and what total sum is likely to be paid out to this category of ratepayer in the year 1985-86.

Mr. Younger: The information requested is not held centrally.

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what the average rate increase for commercial ratepayers has been in local authority areas where expenditure in the last financial year was kept within his guidelines.

Mr. Ancram: Average commercial rate bills increased by some 18 per cent. in 1985-86 over 1984-85 in the areas of local authorities in Scotland where spending planned by both the regional and the district councils or by the islands council was within guidelines.

Pratt and Whitney (Prestwick)

13. Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the implications for the Scottish economy of the decision by Pratt and Whitney not to set up a service centre for aero engines at Prestwick.

Mr. Younger: Pratt and Whitney has made no decision as yet about the location of its proposed engine servicing plant. I understand that the company has decided to reconsider its whole European service centre operations and that it may be some time before any decisions are made.

Nurses (Pay)

14. Mr. Buchan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when next he intends to meet representatives of the nursing profession to discuss pay and conditions.

Mr. John MacKay: I have had no request for such a meeting, and none is planned.

Salmon Fishing

15. Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received about the viability and prospects of Scottish salmon fishing.

Mr. John MacKay: Representations are received from time to time from a variety of organisations and individuals who are concerned about the state of salmon stocks.

Textile and Hosiery Industries

16. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from the textile and hosiery industries in Scotland about the implications for the economy of the Border region in the absence of a continuing multi-fibre arrangement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. Friend and I have received representations from a number of industry associations on the need for a continuing multi-fibre arrangement not only for the Border region but for the country as a whole. As my right hon. Friend the Minister for Trade—who has responsibility for the arrangement—told the House on 9 May, the Government are in favour of further renewal and he will be pressing this view with our partners in the European Community.

Dundee (Economic Prospects)

17. Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the economic prospects of Dundee.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Dundee, and Scotland as a whole, should share in the continued growth forecast for the United Kingdom economy although as elsewhere this will depend on controlling costs and continuing improvements in productivity and efficiency.

In particular, Dundee should continue to benefit from the Dundee project, under which the Scottish Development Agency and the local authorities are acting together to develop new industrial and business opportunities in the city, and to promote its business image. The project has already helped to create over 700 jobs and attract £15 million of private sector investment with further substantial commitments. The work of the Dundee project will be assisted by Dundee's development area status, and the presence of the Tayside enterprise zone.

Teachers (Industrial Action)

18. Mr. Home-Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many schools to date have been affected by industrial action connected with the teachers' case for an independent pay review.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I understand that almost all the 2,883 local authority primary and secondary schools have been affected to some extent.

20. Mr. Douglas asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a further statement on representations he has received and initiatives taken in relation to the current disputes in Scottish schools.

33. Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what further progress he has made in efforts to settle the teachers strike.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Since October 1984 some 4,900 letters have been received from hon. Members, parents and teachers. By its continuing insistence on an independent review which would look at pay alone, the EIS has prevented a review of pay and conditions of service within the SJNC(SE), as suggested by the Government. On 17 June my right hon. Friend discussed with the education committee of the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities a job description appropriate for a teacher in today's society. This could pave the way for the SNJC to consider the implications for pay and conditions and to draw up a package. The most realistic way forward in resolving the present damaging dispute would be for the teachers to enter forthwith into negotiations with the employers for the current year as an interim step towards a more comprehensive agreement for 1986-87 and subsequent years.

21. Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the current teachers' industrial action in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: This week, strike action is being taken by EIS members in some schools in Lothian region, and the boycott of curricular development work imposed since August 1984 continues. I understand that the Educational Institute of Scotland plans intensified industrial action next term. I deplore the damage to children's education which this entails when the way to the negotiating table remains open.

Asbestos

19. Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received on the transporting of asbestos waste through urban areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: Two organisations, the Inverclyde Tenants Group and the Society Against Violation of the Environment have made representations to my right hon. Friend on this subject. They have been advised that the Health and Safety Executive has confirmed that the standards of containment and cleanliness adopted by the contractor for the removal of the limited quantity of Faslane asbestos, and his contingency measures in the event of a road traffic incident, are such as to ensure that there is in common sense terms no risk to the health of any person from the transport of this low grade waste.

Fife Regional Council (Finance)

22. Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will next discuss local government finance with Fife regional council.

Mr. Ancram: It is not my right hon. Friend's practice to discuss local government finance with individual authorities. He does, however, hold regular meetings on this subject with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities.

Forestry

23. Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he is taking to seek to ensure that forestry operations do not proceed where they do not meet the approval of the Forestry Commission; and if he will list the areas where such development has taken or is taking place.

Mr. John MacKay: With the exception of a number of small areas of plantings which, as I stated in my reply of 8 May, at columns 441-2, to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Shettleston (Mr. Marshall), it is not possible to list, there are only two cases of any significance. These are Crichness and Shielsknowe.

As I said in another reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Shettleston on 8 May, at column 442, and in my subsequent reply of 5 June, at column 170, to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) my right hon. Friend is not proposing to take action at this stage, but will nevertheless be watching the situation very carefully.

Public Expenditure

25. Mr. Malone asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the level of public spending in Scotland per head of population during the last financial year.

Mr. Younger: Figures for 1984-85 are not yet available. As indicated to my hon. Friend in the reply given to him on 22 February 1985, at columns 608-18, by my right hon. and learned Friend the Chief Secretary, the figure for identifiable public expenditure in Scotland in 1983-84 was £2,058·1.

Rents

26. Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will introduce legislation to amend the Rent (Scotland) Act 1984 so as to enable local authorities to have a fair rent registered in any tenancy, so long as the fair rent is not any higher than the existing rent.

Mr. Ancram: We are monitoring the situation to see whether there may be a need to review local authorities' powers under the Rent (Scotland) Act 1984.

Tertiary Education

27. Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the future of tertiary education in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. Friend will be considering the future of tertiary education in Scotland, in the light of comments on the Government's Green Paper on higher education and of recommendations by the Scottish Tertiary Education Advisory Council whose review of higher education in Scotland will be completed later this year, and will make a statement at the appropriate time.

Job Creation

28. Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has for increasing job opportunities for men, women and young people in Scotland.

Mr. Younger: Job opportunities are created by competitive and profitable firms, and the process of job creation therefore depends critically on Scottish industry's success in exploiting the opportunities afforded by the continued economic growth expected this year. The Budget measures were designed to stimulate enterprise, restore market flexibility and provide the low inflation environment in which such firms can flourish.

Forestry Commission Roads

29. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the maintenance of Forestry Commission roads.

Mr. John MacKay: With a few exceptions, for example, forest drives, the majority of the Forestry Commission's 16,000 km of forest roads are built for use only by the commission's and contractor's vehicles, although the public are normally permitted to use them on foot. Some 9,000 km of roads are currently used by heavy vehicles, such as haulage lorries, while the remainder are used by light vehicles and harvesting equipment.

The roads are maintained to a standard sufficient to ensure the safety of legitimate road users; to maintain the flow of traffic at appropriate speeds and to keep down vehicle maintenance costs. The incidence of road maintenance — which costs the commission some £4 million per annum — varies according to a number of factors such as the traffic flow, the weather and the materials employed in the formation of the road.

Steel Industry

31. Mr. James Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next intends to meet the chairman of the British Steel Corporation to discuss the steel position in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. Friend meets the chairman of the British Steel Corporation from time to time to discuss the operations of the corporation in Scotland, but there are no arrangements for any meeting in the immediate future.

Scottish Football Association

32. Mr. McKelvey asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has plans to meet the Scottish Football Association in the near future to discuss rateable values.

Mr. Ancram: No. I shall send the hon. Member a copy of the reply which I have sent to a recent letter from the Scottish Football Association about the rates burden on clubs.

Rural Development Fund

34. Sir Hector Monro asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with the Scottish Development Agency about setting up a rural development fund.

Mr. Younger: Assistance to rural areas was one of the matters discussed when I met the board of the agency on 7 June. These discussions will be taken into account in further consideration of the recommendations which have been made to me for the establishment of a rural development fund.

Legal Aid

35. Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations had been received by 31 May in response to the Government's consultation document on legal aid in Scotland.

Mr. Ancram: By 31 May, 40 responses had been received.

Agriculture (Research and Development)

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the amount spent in each of the last five years on research and development and advisory services in agriculture.

Mr. Younger: The funding by my Department of research and development and advisory services in agriculture at the Scottish agricultural colleges and the Scottish agricultural research institutes is estimated as follows for each of the last five years:

Year	R & D £ million	Advisory Services £ million
1980-81	23·0	4·9
1981-82	26·0	6·1
1982-83	26·9	7·0

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many persons were employed in research and development and advisory services of the Department of Agriculture for Scotland in 1979; and how many he estimates will be employed when the reductions in funding have been implemented.

Mr. Younger: The number of staff employed at the eight Scottish agricultural research institutes at 1 October 1979 was 1,376. Because of the multi-disciplinary nature of the work at the three Scottish agricultural colleges, it is not possible to provide a breakdown of the number of staff employed on research and development and advisory work alone, but the total number of staff employed at 1 October 1979 was 1,267.

The number of staff likely to be employed in the institutes and colleges when the reductions in public funding announced in the public expenditure White Paper have been implemented will depend on a number of factors, including the level of private funding from the industry.

Crofter Houses

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applications for grants and loans for the building of crofter houses were approved in 1983 and 1984.

Mr. Younger: The information is as follows:

Number of approved applications for assistance under the Crofters Building Grants and Loans Scheme

	1983	1984
New housing	132	138
Housing improvement	171	252
Total	304	390

Higher Education

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of Scottish school leavers continued their education at universities and colleges in each of the years 1980-81 to 1984-85.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Information is available from biennial school leavers' surveys. The following table shows the percentages of school leavers who, in the following spring, were in full-time further or higher education.

Type of full-time education	Session of leaving school
	1979-80	1981-82	*1983-84
	Percentage	Percentage	Percentage
University	7	8	n/a

New Towns Development Corporations

Dr. M. S. Miller asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total capital expenditure by each of the new town development corporations in Scotland in each year from 1978-79 to 1984-85, inclusive; and what was the capital expenditure on housing by each of the development corporations in each year, within these totals.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information is set out in the following table:

Total capital expenditure

	1978-79	1979-80	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85

Livingston	10·6	10·9	8·6	8·2	4·4	4·2	5·6
Irvine	7·8	4·9	8·6	4·1	2·8	3·4	4·5

Dr. M. S. Miller asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is (a) the total allowance of capital expenditure and (b) the allowance of capital expenditure for housing, within the total expenditure of each of the new town development corporations in Scotland for 1985-86; and how this is expected to be funded in each case.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information is set out in the following table:

1985-86

	East Kilbride	Cumbernauld	Glenrothes	Livingston	Irvine
Total Capital Expenditure Allocation	10·3	12·6	7·7	14·0	8·5

Dr. M. S. Miller asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the sources of funding of the capital expenditure of each of the new town development corporations in Scotland for each of the years 1978-79 to 1984-85 inclusive.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information is set out in the following table:

	1978-79	1979-80	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85

Net capital investment is funded centrally through borrowing from the national loans fund.

Dr. M. S. Miller asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the figures for numbers of employees of each of the new town development corporations in Scotland in (a) manual and (b) non-manual categories, for each of the years 1978-79 to 1984-85 inclusive; and what are the present figures.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information is set out in the following table:

Dr. M. S. Miller asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the average numbers of persons on the waiting lists for houses to let maintained by the new town development corporations in Scotland in each of the years 1978-79 to 1984-85 inclusive; and what are the present numbers.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information available about average numbers on housing waiting lists maintained by new town development corporations is not on a uniform basis and does not enable me to give a meaningful reply.

Dr. M. S. Miller asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the amounts of housing grant paid to each of the new town development corporations in Scotland in each of the years 1978-79 to 1984-85 inclusive.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The amounts of housing grant paid to each of the new town development corporations in Scotland in each of the years 1978-79 to 1984-85 are set out in the following table:

	*East Kilbride £	Cumbernauld £	Glenrothes £	Livinston £	Irvine £

New Towns (Rents)

Dr. M. S. Miller asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the average rentals charged for development corporation houses in each of the new towns in Scotland in each of the years 1978-79 to 1984-85 inclusive; and what were the comparable figures for rents of district council houses in each of the districts containing the new towns concerned.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The figures requested are shown in the table and refer to the position at 30 September of each year.

Food (Self-sufficiency)

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the estimated level of Scottish self-sufficiency in 1984 for the following food commodities: (a) beef and veal, (b) mutton and lamb, (c) pigmeat, (d) poultrymeat, (e) liquid milk, (f) cheese, (g) butter, (h) eggs, (i) barley, (j) oats, (k) wheat and (l) potatoes.

Mr. Younger: No reliable data for individual years are available. Information for the three-year period centred on 1983 will be ready shortly, and I will write to the right hon. Member then.

Local Government Boundary Commission for Scotland

Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has made any changes in the composition of the Local Government Boundary Commission for Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Younger: The members of the Local Government Boundary Commission for Scotland are as follows:

R. A. Bennett, QC, chairman — reappointed on 1 November 1982 until 31 October 1986

Mr. G. Carlton, OBE, vice chairman—reappointed as a member on 1 November 1982 and appointed as vice chairman on 17 May 1985 until 31 October 1986

Mr. S. McDowall, CBE, member — appointed on 1 November 1982 until 31 October 1986

Mr. A. Napier, member—appointed on 1 May 1985 until 31 October 1988
Professor J. B. Baird, member—appointed on 1 June 1985 until 31 October 1988

The chairman, vice chairman and members are all appointed by the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Museums Advisory Board (Report)

Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has received the report of the Museums Advisory Board, which he set up to examine the future operation under one board of trustees of Scotland's national museums.

Mr. Younger: I have now received the advisory board's report. It is a cogent document, and I have written to the Marquess of Bute to express my thanks to him and to the members of the board for the time and effort they have devoted to its preparation.

The report sets out a number of detailed recommendations for the future organisation of Scotland's two national museums—the Royal Scottish Museum and the National Museum of Antiquities of Scotland — after they are brought together administratively on 1 October this year under a single board of trustees, as foreshadowed in the National Heritage (Scotland) Act 1985. I am now, at the advisory board's request, making the report generally available. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses, and are being issued to a range of bodies and individuals whom the advisory board consulted or who submitted evidence to it. Further copies will be available on application to the Scottish Office Library, New St. Andrew's House, Edinburgh, price £2 each and are also for sale at the two museums.

The report's main recommendation is that the two museums should be integrated as fully as possible and that development of the Williams committee's concept of a Museum of Scotland should be achieved within the framework thus created. I accept the arguments set out in the report in favour of this approach, which I fully endorse for the future organisation of the museums. Confirmation of this point should enable the trustees, when appointed, to make early progress along the lines set out in the report.

The report makes a number of other detailed recommendations on the staffing and accommodation of the museums. In relation to staffing, the additional resources which I made available for the national museums in 1985-86 will, as the report acknowledges, enable a number of the posts, which the advisory board identifies as those most urgently needed, to be filled. I will give consideration over the coming months to the additional staffing requirements identified in the report and to the case which it makes for substantial additional accommodation for the national museums, most notably on the empty site next to the present Royal Scottish Museum building in Chambers street. I have, of course, already indicated that priority will be given to the national museums in the allocation of resources from the capital programme for the Scottish national institutions. Detailed decisions on the nature and timing of additional accommodation must await the outcome of the 1985 public expenditure survey.

Many of the recommendations in the report will require the consideration of the new trustees. I am pleased to announce that Lord Bute has agreed to undertake the chairmanship of the National Museums Board for an initial period of one year, to 30 September 1986, with the possibility of extension thereafter by mutual agreement. I intend to announce the appointment of other trustees before the end of this month.

PRIME MINISTER

Recycled Paper

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Prime Minister which Government Departments are currently using recycled paper.

The Prime Minister: Her Majesty's Stationery Office encourages its suppliers to produce recycled paper and paper products and makes these available for use by all Government Departments. However, central records are not kept of actual usage.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Young Persons (Remand)

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy concerning the holding of young persons on remand within adult prisons.

Mr. Mellor: Within the constraints imposed by the size of the prison population and the availability of accommodation it is our policy that remand prisoners should be held in locations which are easily reached by their families and legal advisers, and that young people (that is those aged under 21) on remand should be held in a separate establishment or part of an establishment. Where complete separation of that kind is not possible, every effort is made to keep young people apart from adults within an establishment. Very great care is always taken to keep juveniles (that is those aged under 17) apart from adults.

Thorp Arch Remand Centre

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what facilities for recreation are available at the Thorp Arch remand centre.

Mr. Mellor: Thorp Arch has a sports field with two soccer pitches, a sports hall, including a side-area with weight-training equipment, a television and video room, a room equipped for indoor association and games, and a library.

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whom he consulted before making his decision to convert the Thorp Arch remand centre into a category C prison.

Mr. Mellor: The change of role at Thorp Arch is part of a package designed to adjust the use of prison department accommodation so as to reduce extreme overcrowding at Leeds prison. My right hon. and learned Friend did not consult outside the Home Office on the specific adjustment that he has announced.

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the maximum number of young persons who can be held at Thorp Arch remand centre at present; and what is the maximum number of adult category C prisoners who could be held in the present accommodation.

Mr. Mellor: Thorp Arch has a certified normal accommodation of 164, including 17 places in the hospital. As a training prison, its certified normal accommodation will fall to 147 because hospital places are not included in the certified normal accommodation of training prisons. No more than 234 prisoners have in practice been held there although the establishment's theoretical operating capacity is higher than that. The precise number of adult prisoners to be held in the establishment has yet to be settled.

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many net places in the prison system will be lost as a consequence of his announced coversion of Thorp Arch remand centre into a category C prison.

Mr. Mellor: The change of use of Thorp Arch is part of a package designed to ease the pressure on Leeds prison and which includes the conversion of Hull into a local prison. The net effect of these changes will be an increase of over 150 in the operating capacity of the prison system.

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes to the present staffing levels at the Thorp Arch remand centre will follow its conversion to a category C prison.

Mr. Mellor: Thorp Arch will require fewer staff than at present because it will no longer be necessary to convey untried prisoners from Thorp Arch to the courts. Future staffing levels are still being assessed.

Remand Centres (Closures)

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy not to approve any proposal for the closure of a remand centre for young persons until he has satisfied himself of the availability of adequate suitable facilities in other similar establishments.

Mr. Mellor: The availability and suitability of alternative facilities is one of the major factors taken into account before any decision about a change of role is taken.

Category C Prisoners

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what constraints there are in classifying an adult category C prisoner in terms of (a) nature of offence and (b) length of sentence.

Mr. Mellor: A category C prisoner is defined as one who cannot be trusted in open conditions but who does not have the ability or resources to make a determined escape attempt.

The security categorisation of prisoners is decided on the basis of individual assessments that take a number of factors into account. In the case of long-term prisoners these assessments are periodically reviewed. Prisoners are not excluded by their offences or sentence lengths from being placed in category C in due course, but the assessment process is intended to exclude those who are dangerous or serious escape risks.

Remand Centres and Adult Prisons

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what differing requirements there are in respect of (a) internal security, (b) perimeter security, (c) recreational facilities and (d) staffing levels, between a remand centre for young offenders and a category C adult prison.

Mr. Mellor: In general, a category C adult training prison requires a somewhat lower level of security, more recreational facilities and fewer staff than does a young offender remand centre.

Dogs

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement of Government policy on the breeding of dogs.

Mr. Mellor: The Breeding of Dogs Act 1973 regulates the breeding of dogs for sale by means of a local authority licensing system. The Government have no plans for any further measures to control dog breeding.

Police National Computer (Commercial Competitions)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for reports from chief constables about whether officers in their forces have made use of the police national computer or other computer data bases to which they have access in order to contact potential winners in a commercial competition based on vehicle registration numbers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Police Complaints Authority has approved the appointment of an assistant chief constable to conduct an inquiry, under the authority's supervision, into this alleged misuse of the police national computer.

"Television Without Frontiers"

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government on the proposals in the European Economic Community Green Paper entitled "Television Without Frontiers"; what representations he has made to the Commission on this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Government have not reached a firm view on whether the Community has competence to legislate on broadcasting matters. We support the general objective of the Green Paper, which is to facilitate television broadcasting across frontiers and thereby assist the process of European integration, but we do not consider that the case for Community legislation to achieve this objective has yet been made out. In the Government's view, the Green Paper lays too much emphasis upon the economic aspects of broadcasting and fails to give due weight both to the wider cultural considerations and to the role of the Council of Europe in facilitating trans-frontier broadcasting among a wider grouping of European nations. These and other more detailed points have been made to the Commission in the official discussions in Brussels.

Immigration Rules

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to complete his review of whether to make generally available instructions to immigration officers dealing with the interpretation of the immigration rules; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton (Mr. Kaufman) on 29 April, at column 24.

Theft Act 1978

Mr. Hicks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce amending legislation relating to the provisions of section 3 of the Theft Act 1978 as it affects hotels, restaurants and taxis in view of the ruling of the House of Lords on Thursday 13 June about a client's intention to pay; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend will, of course, study the House of Lords ruling in the particular case with interest. We have no evidence to suggest that, in general, those offering services requiring payment on the spot are not properly protected from dishonest actions by the Theft Acts.

TRANSPORT

Coaches

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many new coaches were registered in the United Kingdom in 1974 and 1984; and what percentage of coaches newly registered were (a) manufactured and (b) produced in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Spicer: According to figures supplied by the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders, in 1974 5,341 buses and coaches were newly registered in this country. 98 per cent. of these were largely of British manufacture. Comparable figures for 1984 are 3,379 and 77 per cent. Separate figures for coaches are not available.

Railway Carriages (Wheelchairs)

Mr. Sackville asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the percentage of British Rail passenger carriages which are currently equipped to accommodate wheelchairs; and what plans there are for future provision of such carriages.

Mr. David Mitchell: I understand from British Rail that the proportion of rolling stock on inter-city services with accommodation for wheelchair-bound persons is currently about 60 per cent., but is expected to rise to 90 per cent. by the end of 1987. British Rail estimates that about 19 per cent. of provincial sector rolling stock and 15 per cent. of London and south-east sector stock is equipped to carry wheelchair-bound passengers; these figures will rise as new sliding-door rolling stock is introduced, or existing stock refurbished.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Commonwealth Education Ministers (Nicosia Meeting)

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the implementation of the objectives agreed at Nicosia in July 1984 by the Commonwealth Education Ministers.

Mr. Brooke: The Commonwealth Secretariat is pursuing the studies and activities agreed in Nicosia on resources for education, youth unemployment and student mobility. The Commonwealth Standing Committee on Student Mobility is expected to issue a further report before Commonwealth Education Ministers meet again in October this year. In this connection, the new scholarship scheme announced on 3 June at columns 9-10 by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development will foster student mobility within the Commonwealth, as advocated by Ministers in Nicosia.

Pupil-Teacher Ratio

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish the latest pupil-teacher ratio for England, excluding head teachers.

Mr. Dunn: The overall pupil-teacher ratio in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools in January 1984 was 17·9. If head teachers are excluded, exceptionally, from the calculation it is estimated that a ratio of 19·1 is produced for January 1984.

School Buildings (Maintenance and Repair)

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he is satisfied with the level of resources available to local education authorities to maintain and repair school buildings.

Mr. Dunn: It is for local authorities to decide, within the overall resources available to them, their own levels of expenditure on the maintenance and repair of school buildings.

School Meals

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the figure of school children in receipt of free school meals for the latest month for which figures are available and give the comparative figure for the same month in 1979.

Mr. Dunn: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on Tuesday 11 June, at column 426. The figures requested are collected annually in October in the school meals census.

Students (Travel Grants)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what sums were paid out in additional travel grants to students in higher education for each of the past five years for which they were available.

Mr. Brooke: The information relates to local authority expenditure on excess travel allowance in England and Wales. It covers full-value mandatory and discretionary awards up to, and including, 1982-83, but information for 1983-84 relates to mandatory awards only.

	£ million
1979-80	16·9
1980-81	21·0
1981-82	21·1
1982-83	26·2
1983-84	23·8

Sandwich Courses

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress has been made by the steering committee on research into sandwich education; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph: The report of the steering committee on the programme of research into sandwich education was published today. Copies of the report have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. As was announced in the Green Paper "The Development of Higher Education in the 1990s" (Cmnd. 9524), the Government propose to consult the relevant advisory bodies about the report's conclusions and will look to them in particular to offer guidance on means of ensuring that sandwich courses justify their extra cost.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Estate Agents

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in how many cases banning orders have been made against estate agents under the Estate Agents Act 1979 following the bankruptcy or the misconduct of an estate agent.

Mr. Fletcher: This is a matter for the Director General of Fair Trading. I have been in touch with him and he will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Industrial Development Unit

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what percentage of the executive officials currently in the industrial development unit of his Department are seconded from the private sector of industry.

Mr. Butcher: Sixty per cent. of the current members of the Department's industrial development unit with executive responsibilities are seconded from the private sector. The 12 secondees provide the bulk of the team that appraises usually the larger applications for selective financial assistance, and gives other financial advice to the Department. The rest of the unit is staffed with permanent officials, responsible for such matters as the avoidance of conflicts of interest among the secondees and members of the Industrial Development Advisory Board, the proper conduct of the unit's business, and policy matters. Seconded members of the unit provide the Department with commercial experience and professional skills of a high order not usually to be found among permanent officials. Offers of financial assistance are the responsibility of Ministers, and letters offering assistance are invariably signed by permanent officials with proper delegated authority who are fully accountable for their content.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what percentage of the executive officials currently in the industrial development unit of his Department have been seconded from firms or organisations which have, in the last six years received section 7 and 8 grants for industry.

Mr. Butcher: Of the 21 current members of the Department's industrial development unit with executive responsibilities, three individuals have been seconded from two private sector organisations which have received offers of selective financial assistance totalling £1·3 million in the past six financial years under sections 7 and 8 of the Industrial Development Act 1982 and its predecessor legislation. £1,423 million of such assistance has been offered in total over the same period.

Knitwear

Mr. Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what protection exists at present against imports of knitwear into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Trippier: The European Community has negotiated textile agreements within the framework of the multi-fibre arrangement with 27 low-cost suppliers. These include numerous quotas on imports of knitwear (as well as textiles and woven clothing) into individual member states and also provide for the introduction of new quotas when appropriate. A similar arrangement is applied to Taiwan, and other autonomous arrangements are applied to certain state trading countries. The Community has also negotiated voluntary restraint arrangements with several of its preferential trading partners; five of these cover imports of knitwear.

Product Liability

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what position has been reached in negotiations over the formulation of a European Economic Community directive on product liability; what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: Discussions are currently taking place between experts to resolve certain remaining points of detail on the draft directive; we hope that these points will be resolved quickly and that we will be in a position to adopt the directive soon. We are in favour of this directive and, in the interests of making progress on a subject which has been under discussion in Brussels for nearly 10 years, we are negotiating constructively on the proposed compromise solution.

This compromise solution is for a directive which introduces the concept of strict liability for defective products throughout the Community, with a development risks defence but no financial limit. Individual member states would be permitted to derogate on both these last points (subject to certain limitations), and there would be a review after a transitional period to assess the effects of these derogations.

International Tropical Timber Organisation

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) whether he will now agree to offer financial inducements to locate the headquarter's organisation of the newly created tropical timber agreement in London, comparable to those made by the Governments of Belgium, France, Greece, Idonesia, Japan and the Netherlands; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he will consider making a voluntary contribution to the organisation of the tropical timber agreement headquarters if it agrees to situate itself in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: No. The Government are not prepared to offer the International Tropical Timber Organisation better arrangements than those which have been made for the international commodity organisations whose headquarters are already in London.

Gas and Electricity (Resale)

Mr. Anderson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy to respond substantively to the Director General of Fair Trading's report on the re-selling of gas and electricity by landlords before the end of this Session.

Mr. Fletcher: The Government are currently considering the Director General's report "Resale of Electricity by Landlords" and will respond as soon as practical.

Japan (Ministerial Visit)

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what were the purposes of the recent visit paid by the Minister for Information Technology to Japan; what progress was achieved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pattie: I visited Japan to attend the British National Day at the Tsukuba science and technology exhibition and to give the keynote speech at a "Britain Means Business" seminar to promote inward investment. In addition, I had meetings with several Japanese Ministers and emphasised our concern that the market should be more accessible to imports.

BT Shares

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry further to the answer of 13 June, Official Report, column 499-500, what steps he has taken to satisfy himself that no city firm made allocations of British Telecom shares to individual employees in amounts greater than the limit of 800 shares applied to ordinary investors.

Mr. Butcher: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

WALES

Nursery Education

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many children under the age of five years in Wales receive nursery education; what were the corresponding figures for the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: The information on pupils aged under five years in maintained nursery schools, for the years 1974 to 1984, is as follows:

	Under five's in maintained nursery schools*
At January each year	Full-time	Part-time	Total
1974	1,513	2,787	4,300
1975	1,476	2,975	4,451

ENERGY

Civil Nuclear Power Installations

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the civil nuclear power installations that have been (a) decommissioned and (b) completely dismantled; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which my hon. Friend the Member for Croydon, Central (Mr. Moore) gave to the hon. Member for Kilmarnock and Loudoun (Mr. McKelvey) on 31 March 1983 at column 262. There have been no recent developments.

National Coal Board

Mr. Portillo asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether assurances about Government financial support for the National Coal Board, as set out in his answer of 11 July 1983, Official Report, column 225, to the hon. Member for Tatton, will apply in similar terms to 1985-86.

Mr. Peter Walker: One fundamental objective of the National Coal Board must be to earn a satisfactory return on its assets in real terms after the payment of social grants. To this end the board is planning to attain break-even on revenue account by 1987-88. In the short term, however, I can confirm that subject to Parliament's approving the necessary provisions, the Government will continue to make available funds to enable the NCB to meet its obligations as they fall due during the board's current financial year to 29 March 1986.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Royal Victoria Hospital, Belfast

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many engineers, technical staff, and so on, were employed in the maintenance of buildings in the year ended March 1975 at the Royal Victoria hospital, Belfast; and how many are currently so employed.

Mr. Chris Patten: The figures are not available in the form requested. At 31 December 1974, 92 engineers and technical staff were employed in the former north and west Belfast district which included other hospital facilities in addition to the Royal Victoria hospital. The current figure for the Royal Group of Hospitals, which includes the Royal Victoria hospital, is 123.

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the extent of additional buildings provided at the Royal Victoria hospital, Belfast, between April 1975 and April 1985, expressed as a percentage of total accommodation.

Mr. Chris Patten: Seven per cent. However, some 13,000 sq m of additional accommodation have been provided to serve the Royal Victoria hospital, the Royal Belfast hospital for sick children and the Royal maternity hospital which are all located on the Grosvenor road site.

Children (Heart Disorders)

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on current provision for children suffering from heart disorders under the National Health Service in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Chris Patten: Paediatric cardiology is a regional specialty based at the Royal Belfast hospital for sick children. A consultant paediatric cardiologist supported by a registrar in paediatrics provides specialist care for children with heart disorders. Two cardiac surgeons at the Royal Victoria hospital provide cardiac surgery services for children who require heart operations.

Paediatric Cardiology

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will make a statement detailing the resources committed to paediatric cardiology in Northern Ireland;

(2) if he will give consideration to proposals to appoint a second paediatric cardiologist to serve the needs of children in Northern Ireland who have heart abnormalities.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. My Department, in consultation with the four health and social servies boards, is giving consideration to the proposal that a second paediatric cardiologist should be appointed.

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, if he will make a statement detailing how many patients are currently being treated or examined by the paediatric cardiologist in Northern Ireland; and how many patients are awaiting such attention.

Mr. Chris Patten: In 1984, 350 patients received treatment in hospital and 1,442, of whom 242 were new, were examined at outpatients clinics; 162 patients are awaiting such attention.

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement detailing the equipment available for use in Northern Ireland by a paediatric cardiologist; and what staff complement would be required to ensure optimum use of this equipment.

Mr. Chris Patten: A full range of diagnostic equipment is available for paediatric cardiology and is fully utilised.

Health and Social Services Boards (Accounts)

Mr. A. Cecil Walker asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will place in the Library a copy of the full accounts of the health and social services boards in Northern Ireland for 1983-84, together with copies of the auditors' reports.

Mr. Chris Patten: No. A summary of board accounts is presented annually to Parliament, and those for 1983-84 were presented on 5 June as Cmnd. 9523. The auditor's report is presented to the Department and is available to the Comptroller and Auditor-General, who reports to Parliament on the summary of accounts.

Civil Service Manpower

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what decisions he has taken about Northern Ireland Civil Service manpower after April 1985.

Mr. Hurd: I have reviewed manpower requirements of Northern Ireland Departments up to 1988 and decided on the following targets:

1 April 1986—25,150
1 April 1988—24,550

The aim has been and continues to be the improvement of the Civil Service and to match staff numbers closely to the necessary function of Departments. A small contingency margin has been included to give a measure of flexibility in planning; the figures will be revised each year as part of the regular expenditure survey to take account of changing work load and other developments.

Student Awards

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement outlining the number of discretionary awards allocated by each of the education and library boards and his Department for the current academic year indicating the numbers of higher value and lower value awards, the numbers of minimum and maximum awards, the numbers of living at home and living away from home awards, the numbers of applications for awards, and the total amount allocated by each awarding agency.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 4 June 1985, c. 140]: At undergraduate level the Department is responsible only for teacher training awards. Education and library boards are responsible for discretionary awards.

The information requested is as follows:

Education and Library Board

	Belfast	North-Eastern	Southern	South-Eastern	Western	Totals
Total number of Discretionary awards made in 1984-85 academic year (A)	395	455	316	382	388	1,936
Of (A) the number which are full value awards	218	219	188	246	181	1,052
Of (A) the number which are lesser value awards	177	236	128	136	207	884

Of (A) the number which are living away from home awards	193	310	223	155	269	1,150
Total Budget for discretionary awards for financial year ended 31 March 1985	£510,000	£714,000	£571,000	£515,000	£632,000	£2,942,000

NB: Statistics on the number of applications are not collated.

Housing Executive

Mr. A. Cecil Walker asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will detail the measures which have been introduced by the Housing Executive to avoid the recurrence of overpayments to contractors.

Mr. Chris Patten [pursuant to his reply, 12 June 1985, c. 477]: I am advised by the chairman of the Housing Executive that the executive's policy, practice and procedures relating to all contract matters were set out in a detailed contracts code which is currently being revised. In addition, the Housing Executive has introduced and developed a financial monitor system which compares actual payments to planned expenditure. Also a computerised contracts register is at an advanced stage of design. It will record all payments made to all contractors against a planned financial profile and compare payments to physical completions. This system will highlight, at an early date, variations from planned physical and/or financial profiles and enable remedial action, where necessary, to be taken.

Mr. A. Cecil Walker asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the total extra costs to the Housing Executive, resulting from the liquidation of the firm involved in the overpayment investigated by the Local Government Auditor, have been computed; and what advice his Department has given to the Housing Executive about the avoidance of a recurrence of similar cases in the future.

Mr. Chris Patten [pursuant to his reply, 12 June 1985, c. 477]: I am advised by the chairman of the Housing Executive that the total costs have not yet been fully ascertained as the matter is still under active examination. The Department of the Environment (Northern Ireland) has discussed the particular case with the Housing Executive and the need generally to ensure that similar cases are avoided in the future. Appropriate procedures and controls have been developed and the Department has been assured that they have been implemented.

Mr. A. Cecil Walker asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what procedures have now been laid down by the Housing Executive to avoid losses due to solicitors withholding proceeds of sales, bankruptcy or deaths of individuals involved in transactions.

Mr. Chris Patten [pursuant to his reply, 12 June 1985, c. 477]: This is a matter for the chairman of the Housing Executive who has advised me that procedures have recently been reviewed and the following measures are now being implemented:

(a) when notified that a sale is about to be completed, the executive will request that the tenant's solicitor immediately transfer the proceeds from the sale;

(b) the financial transaction will be by banker's order to guard against default by the executive's solicitor;

(c) the possibility of having the banker's order made payable directly to the executive will be explored with the Law Society as an additional safeguard against default by the executive's solicitor;

(d) on notification by the Law Society that a solicitor's affairs are not in order, or that a solicitor has died, the executive will immediately institute proceedings to recover any proceeds from uncompleted sales.

I understand from the Local Government Auditor that these procedures should preclude any losses due to a solicitor's bankruptcy.

Mr. A. Cecil Walker asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made by the Housing Executive towards reconciliation of the amount of rates collectable with payment actually made to the rating authority for 1981-82 and 1982-83 in respect of the Belfast region.

Mr. Chris Patten [pursuant to his reply, 12 June 1985, c. 477]: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but I am informed that a small group set up within the rates control section is concentrating solely on the reconciliation and it is anticipated that the exercise will be completed within the current financial year 1985-86.

Mr. A. Cecil Walker asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many posts are vacant in the claims management section of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive; and what difficulties are being experienced in filling these posts.

Mr. Chris Patten [pursuant to his reply, 12 June 1985, c. 477]: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing

Executive, However, I am informed that there is one professional post vacant within the claims management section. Internal and external recruitment measures have been unsuccessful in attracting suitable applicants with the necessary experience in this type of work and cover is provided by secondments from within the executive.

Terrorism (Explosive Materials)

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what weight of explosive material, believed to be in the possession of a terrorist organisation, was seized by the security forces in Northern Ireland in each month since 1 January 1983 to the latest convenient date; and of that explosive material how much was of commercial origin and how much home made.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 12 June 1985, c. 479] The information is as follows:

Hospital Nursing Provision

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many hospital beds and qualified nurses there are in Northern Ireland per head of population.

Mr. Chris Patten [pursuant to his reply, 17 June 1985, c. 39]: In 1983, the last year for which figures are available, the information in respect of hospital beds was as follows:

	Number	Number per 1,000 of the population
General Hospitals	10,965	7·0
Mental Illness Hospitals	4,513	2·9
Mental Handicap Hospitals	1,501	1·0
All Hospitals	16,979	10·8

In the same year, the information in respect of qualified nurses was as follows:

Number	Number per 1,000 of the population
Hospital Nurses	12,419	7·9
Community Nurses	1,927	1·2
	14,346	9·1

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Rudolf Hess

Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to make representations to the Soviet Government about the release from Spandau prison of Rudolf Hess; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: We shall take further action in consultation with our French and American allies when there is some prospect that the Soviet authorities will respond positively; that is sadly not the case at present.

Arab-Israeli Dispute

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on recent developments in the search for a solution to the Arab-Israeli dispute.

Mr. Luce: We remain convinced that a just and lasting settlement of the Arab-Israel dispute, arrived at by peaceful negotiation, is overwhelmingly in the interests of all the parties and of the international community as a whole. We therefore fully support King Hussein's current initiative, and also welcome the ideas put forward by the Israeli Prime Minister on 10 June. We maintain a close dialogue with the parties, with whom the prime responsibility for action must lie. As part of this process we recently welcomed in London King Hussein of Jordan and Deputy Prime Minister Shamir of Israel. We are also keeping in close touch with our partners in the European Community, and with the United States, on this important subject.

Commonwealth Higher Education Unit

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will propose the creation of a Commonwealth higher education unit with his opposite numbers from Commonwealth countries when he next meets them.

Mr. Renton: A Commonwealth higher education unit was established in August 1984 by the Commonwealth Secretariat and it is likely that its work will be discussed by Commonwealth Education Ministers when they meet in Sofia on the eve of the UNESCO general conference this October.

Diplomatic Relations

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the names of those states and territories which are either not officially recognised by the United Kingdom or with which Her Majesty's Government does not have diplomatic relations.

Mr. Renton: We do not have diplomatic relations with the following states:

The People's Socialist Republic of Albania
The Argentine Republic
Cambodia
The Republic of Guatemala
Libya

We do not have diplomatic relations with the kingdom of Bhutan but maintain friendly contacts and conduct official business with its embassy in New Delhi.

We have only consular relations with the following states:

Andorra
San Marino
Monaco
Liechtenstein

The following, among others, are sometimes referred to as independent sovereign states but are not recognised as such by Her Majesty's Government:

North Korea
Taiwan
Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus
Transkei or any of the other Black Homelands established in South Africa

Foreign Nationals

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to the number of foreign nationals, including diplomats and other foreign representatives currently residing within the United Kingdom; if he will give the comparative figures for each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: In my reply of 26 March, at columns 65-74, I gave my hon. Friend details of the number of diplomats residing with the United Kingdom in the past five years.

Information on the number of foreign nationals in the United Kingdom is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department.

Women (Discrimination)

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Government intend to ratify the United Nations convention on the elimination of all forms of discrimination against women.

Mr. Renton: The Government have decided to ratify this convention. Our ratification will be accompanied by various declarations and reservations. We do not envisage that it will be necessary to make changes to United Kingdom legislation to enable the United Kingdom to ratify. Before our instrument of ratification can be deposited, we have to consult the Dependent Territories, the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man to ascertain whether they wish to be included in our ratification, and, if so, with what declarations and reservations. We are now doing this. I have arranged to have copies of our declarations and reservations placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

ENVIRONMENT

Population Projections

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the 1983 based population projections for England currently being prepared by the Office of Population, Censuses and Surveys will be used for the production of a revised series of households forecasts for England, the regions and counties.

Sir George Young: The 1983-based population projections to be published by the OPCS will be used by the Department to calculate the next set of household projections superseding the 1981-based estimates.

Housing Improvements and Repairs

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in the light of the Green Paper on housing improvements and repairs, he will now permit housing authorities to invest all receipts from sales of council housing on new building and home improvements without central Government control.

Sir George Young: The measures taken by the Government to reduce the rate at which capital receipts can be used in the present financial year were necessary to lessen the risk of local authority capital spending exceeding planned levels. My right hon. Friend has no plans to remove this control.

Nuclear Waste (Humberside)

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if there are any site investigations proposed, or currently being undertaken, with a view to the possible storage of low, intermediate or high-level nuclear waste at Killingholme, Humberside.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: No site investigations are proposed or are being undertaken in connection with the storage of nuclear waste at Killingholme, Humberside. So far as the development of disposal facilities is concerned, I would refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Ashdown) on 25 April, at column 548.

Local Authority Housing

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the total capital investment in local authority housing during the period April 1979 to December 1984, and the expenditure on local authority grants for repairs and improvements for the same period.

Sir George Young: During the period April 1979 to December 1984 housing capital investment in land, new dwellings, acquisitions and renovation by local authorities totalled £9,689 million and expenditure on home improvement grants amounted to £2,342 million.

Ground Rents

Mr. Loyden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from owner-occupiers about companies taking over the ownership of their ground rent; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friend has received representations from time to time from some owner-occupiers when the reversionary interest in their homes has changed hands. Most long leaseholders living in houses are entitled to acquire the freehold under the terms of the Leasehold Reform Act 1967. The management problems of people living in flats are being considered by the committee which my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Construction set up under the chairmanship of Mr. Edward Nugee QC.

Urban Programme (Waltham Forest)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer of 20 May, Official Report, column 392, if he will now state the increase in spending on the urban programme in the London Borough of Waltham Forest since 1979 in real terms.

Sir George Young: The increase in the London borough of Waltham Forest's urban programme allocation since 1979 is the same in real terms as in cost terms, that is 51 per cent.

Cartmel and Furness Local Plan

Mr. Franks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will order a public inquiry into the Cartmel and Furness local plan prepared by the planning department of the South Lakeland district council.

Mr. Macfarlane: No. When the South Lakeland district council begins formal procedures for the adoption of the plan it will put copies of it on deposit and invite objections. Objectors will have a right to be heard at a public inquiry taken by an inspector appointed by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, but reporting to the district council.

Homeless Persons

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the number of people in England who are homeless; and how many are in families with children, married couples and single people, respectively.

Mr. Gow: During the second half of 1984 the total number of households who, after due inquiry, were found by local authorities to be homeless amounted to some 65,000, of whom about two thirds had accommodation secured for them. My Department does not collect information on the size or marital status of these households.

Water Supply, Rawmarsh

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, when he next meets the chairman of the Yorkshire water authority, he will discuss the level of water supply in parts of Rawmarsh.

Mr. Macfarlane: The day-to-day management of the supply and distribution system is the responsibility of the water authority, to which any questions should be referred.

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the nature of the contamination of Roundwood brook in Rawmarsh in the Wentworth constituency;

(2) if, when he next meets the chairman of the Yorkshire water authority, he will discuss with him the problem and the nuisance arising from the contaminated condition of Roundwood brook in Rawmarsh near Rotherham;

(3) if, when he next meets the chairman of the Yorkshire water authority, he will discuss the sewerage arrangements in the Walker street and Claypit lane areas of Rawmarsh near Rotherham.

Mr. Macfarlane: The contamination of the Roundwood brook is due to occasional discharges of sewerage effluent in periods of heavy rainfall which can overload the sewer capacity. The Yorkshire water authority has planned a major project to improve the situation.

This is a local problem and is therefore appropriate for discussion and consultation at that level.

Toxteth Disturbances (Compensation)

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria is being used in the settling of claims for compensation arising from the Toxteth disturbances in 1981.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: The Merseyside county council was responsible under the Riot Damages Act 1886 for settling compensation claims arising from the disturbances in Toxteth and other areas of Merseyside in 1981. Claims were settled in accordance with the provisions of the 1886 Act, which provide for compensation for loss or damage to houses, shops, buildings and their contents arising from a riot. They do not provide compensation for loss of earnings or business or when a riot was not deemed to have taken place.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many claims for compensation were made following the Toxteth disturbances in Liverpool in 1981; how many have been settled; and how many are outstanding at the latest date.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: Following the Toxteth disturbances in 1981, the Merseyside county council, as statutory compensating authority, received 723 claims for compensation. Of those received, 12 claims remain to be settled, including seven where the claimants have not pursued their claims either following an offer by the county council or where contact has been lost with the claimant.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if claimants for compensation for property damaged or destroyed in the Toxteth disturbances in 1981 which are still awaiting settlement will receive interest when the claims are settled.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: Merseyside county council is responsible under the Riot Damages Act 1886 for settling outstanding compensation claims following the disturbances in Toxteth in 1981. Details of individual settlements are confidential to the county and the claimants. However, the 1886 Act does not provide for the payment of interest and when claims are settled there are no other statutes under which it may be paid in respect of riot damages.

Radioactivity

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Christchurch on 7 June, Official Report, columns 271-72, if he will indicate the levels of radioactivity in the following places, using as a measuring point of 100 the gamma radiation dose rates of 964 microgray per year at national grid 10 km square SX66 indicated in his answer referred to as having the highest gamma radiation dose in England and Wales; Dounreay, Windscale, Springfields, Culcheth, Culham, Harwell, Winfrith, Torness, Hunterston, Hartlepool, Heysham, Wylfa, Trawsfynydd, Sizewell, Bradwell, Dungeness, Berkeley, Oldbury and Hinkley Point.

Mr. Gow: Comparable measurements to those reported in the answer given by my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave) on 7 June have been made throughout Great Britain by the National Radiological Protection Board. The values for the 10 km national grid squares in which the places named are situated (or neighbouring squares when this measurement is not available), expressed as a percentage of the gamma dose rate measured at national grid square SX66, are as follows:

National grid 10 km square	Location	Dose rate as percentage of 964 micrograys/ year
NC 96*	Dounreay	32

DEFENCE

Royal Ordnance Factory, Cardiff

Mr. Rogers asked the Secretary of State for Defence what are the arrangements for the disposal of radioactive contaminated beryllium waste at the Royal Ordnance factory, Cardiff.

Mr. Butler: No radioactive contaminated beryllium waste is produced or disposed of at the Royal Ordnance factory, Cardiff.

RAF Cottesmore

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what was the number of Tornado movements in and out of Royal Air Force Cottesmore during the noise survey period in September 1983; and what were the average movement figures for the two weeks on either side of the survey;

(2) on what date or dates in September 1983 staff from his Department took noise readings in the vicinity of RAF Cottesmore; how many staff were involved; how many actual readings were taken; and in which specific villages around the perimeter of the base the readings were carried out;

(3) what the highest decibel level recorded in his Department's noise survey at RAF Cottesmore in September 1983 in each of the surrounding villages which were visited by his Department's investigators.

Mr. Lee: In view of the highly technical nature of the information requested, my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will arrange for my hon. Friend to discuss the matter with the experts concerned.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Defence at what point in the movement of a Tornado aircraft during his Department's investigators' noise survey at RAF Cottesmore the recording machine was (a) switched on and (b) switched off.

Mr. Lee: During all my Department's noise surveys of aircraft noise around airfields, the field measurement teams are kept informed of all aircraft movements by radio from a team member situated in the airfield control tower. The measurement teams will commence recording either when informed from the control tower of the commencement of the next movement, or when the sound of the aircraft increases above the background level. The tape recorder is switched off when the sound has dropped to the background level.

Property Purchases

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many domestic properties have been purchased by his Department in the last four years because of excessive noise from military aircraft; and in what locations.

Mr. Lee: My Department made offers in 1983 to purchase three dwellings in the village of Speckington, Somerset due to noise from military aircraft at RNAS Yeovilton. Purchase of one is complete; the remaining two are still under negotiation.

European Fighter Aircraft

Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the European fighter aircraft.

Sir Edward Gardner asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the conclusions reached during the talks which ended on 18 June about the future development of the European fighter aircraft.

Mr. Heseltine: I met my colleagues from the Federal Republic of Germany, France, Italy and Spain in London on 17 and 18 June to review progress on the proposed European fighter aircraft programme. We had an extremely thorough discussion of the issues involved, drawing on the industrial studies commissioned at the last ministerial meeting in Rome on 16 May. As a result we were able to narrow the options on characteristics of the aircraft to an extent that we were able to give further instructions to industry jointly to finalise the feasibility studies by mid-July. On the basis of this further advice, it is then the intention to take a decision on whether the nations participating in the studies are able to enter project definition for a new European fighter aircraft.

Molesworth Cruise Missile Base

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place a copy of the Property Services Agency map of Molesworth cruise missile base in the Library.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 17 June 1985, c. 39]: Yes. I have today arranged for a copy of the byelaws relating to RAF Molesworth, which contains a plan of the protected area, to be placed in the Library.

Laboratories (Research Budgets)

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for Defence which laboratories within his Department, or within bodies for which he is responsible, have had their research budgets reduced in this financial year; what is the financial value of the reduction; what is this figure expressed as a percentage of the total work carried out in the laboratory; and which of the laboratories for which he is responsible are being considered for privatisation.

Mr. Butler [pursuant to his reply, 18 June 1985]: It is not our practice to publish the financial allocations made to individual research establishments; but the priorities which determine the allocations of funds between different technologies and programmes vary from year to year. The overall defence research budget for 1985-86 is £383 million, or some 3 per cent. greater than the 1984-85 budget of £371 million. As regards the last part of my hon. Friends's question, the evaluation of research and project support reqirements and how they are met is a continuing process.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Food Products (Shelf Life)

Mr. Beggs asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will consider introducing new legislation to relax existing legislation to enable food manufacturers in the United Kingdom to extend the shelf life of products.

Mrs. Fenner: I am always prepared to consider specific proposals for changes to the regulations.

Coast Protection (Hengistbury Head)

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to make a decision on the application by Bournemouth borough council for grant-aid for coastal protection works at Hengistbury Head.

Mrs. Fenner: My Department is discussing the proposals with Bournemouth borough council and a decision will be annouced as soon as possible.

Grazing Livestock

Mr. Thurnham asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what he anticipates will be the effect of the agriculture price review on the grazing livestock sector.

Mr. MacGregor: As my right hon. Friend made clear to the House on 20 May, the price-fixing settlement included various decisions which will benefit the grazing livestock sector, most of which was due to United Kingdom pressure. Amongst these were an increase in the level of support for milk, improvements to the operation of the quota system and a reduction in the co-responsibility levy. For beef, the variable premium scheme has been retained and the suckler cow premium will be continued at last year's level. Producers will also benefit from a small increase in intervention prices as a result of the second stage of harmonisation based on the carcase classification grid. In the sheep sector, certain damaging proposals on the variable premium were withdrawn, and the settlement included an increase in support in 1986, improvements in the seasonal scale, and a promise of proposals to extend annual ewe premium from 1986 to untupped shearlings of specified breeds in certain mountain areas.

Cattle

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many live cattle were imported from Ireland during the last 12 months; and what were the corresponding figures for the last five years.

Mr. MacGregor: The number of live cattle* imported into the United Kingdom from the Republic of Ireland were as follows:

	Thousand head
April 1979-March 1980	212
April 1980-March 1981	306
April 1981-March 1982	209
April 1982-March 1983	147
April 1983-March 1984	202
April 1984-March 1985	198

* Fat, store, breeding and other cattle, and calves.

Source: Overseas trade accounts of the United Kingdom adjusted for unrecorded trade.

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many Forestry Commission felling licences were granted to private individuals or organisations in England in the year to 31 March; and what was the total area of conifers and broadleaved timber so felled.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 6 June 1985, c. 223]: The total number of felling licences granted by the Forestry Commission for the thinning and clear felling of woodland in England in the year to 31 March 1985 was 1,059.

The total area of timber felled in the year is not known as the Forestry Commission does not normally monitor the situation on the ground after granting a licence, unless replanting conditions are involved and these conditions are due to be fulfilled.

EMPLOYMENT

Young People (Clerical Assistant Training)

Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide details of the Manpower Services Commission's proposal to employ and train young people as clerical assistants.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The proposal was to introduce a planned programme of work based on training off the job for the Manpower Services Commission's normal recruitment of 16 and 17-year-old young people for employment, in clerical posts. It has been the subject of discussion since last year with the appropriate Civil Service unions, but agreement has not been reached.

Since the discussions began, the Government have announced their commitment to a two-year youth training scheme nationally. The commission will shortly be considering detailed proposals for submission to the Government at the end of this month, with a view to introducing the new scheme in April 1986.

The commission's management has, therefore, decided that its earlier proposal has been overtaken by events and it has been withdrawn. It will now be discussing with the appropriate Civil Service trade unions a more limited training programme for clerical recruitment pending the introduction of a two-year youth training scheme generally.

Thereafter, I hope that the Civil Service trade unions will drop their objection to the youth training scheme in the Civil Service generally and that we will see a full scale two-year youth training scheme operating for 16 and 17-year-old recruits to the commission and to the Civil Service at large.

Factory Inspectorate

Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the figures of factory inspectors in post for the years 1979 to 1985.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The figures for 1 April of each year are as follows:

	number
1979	951
1980	980
1981	950
1982	886
1983	852
1984	825
1985	845

Labour Statistics

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of (a) unemployed males and (b) unemployed females in the Burnley travel-to-work area have been unemployed for (i) one year, (ii) two years and (iii) three years at the latest available date.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is in the library. The table gives the figures for unemployed claimants in the former Burnley travel-to-work area on 11 April, the latest date for which an analysis of unemployment by duration is available.

Duration of unemployment—percentage of total unemployed

	Male	Female

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Employment what are the unemployment figures for the county of Lancashire categorised by (a) sex, (b) age and (c) duration of unemployment for the last month for which figures are available.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is in the Library. The tables give the figures for unemployed claimants in the best fit of jobcentre areas to the county of Lancashire on 11 April 1985, the latest date for which an analysis of unemployment by age and duration is available.

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many young persons aged 16 to 18 years were unemployed in the Burnley travel-to-work area for the last month for which figures are available.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is in the Library. On 11 April 1985, the latest date for which an analysis of unemployment by age is available, the number of unemployed claimants aged 16 to 18 years in the former Burnley travel-to-work area was 525. Information for the new Burnley travel-to-work area will be available shortly.

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total employment in the following industries in 1979; docks, coal mining, shipbuilding and repairing and steel, respectively; and what are the latest available equivalent figures.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following table gives, for Great Britain, the estimated numbers of employees in employment in June 1979 and at the latest date for the industries specified. Data are collected monthly from a sample of employers within the index of production industries (divisions 1-5 of the 1980 Standard Industrial Classification), and quarterly from a larger sample of employers representing all industries and services. The figures for April 1985 are provisional.

Employees in Employment—Great Britain

Industry	Activity Heading or Group of the 1980 SIC	June 1979	April 1985
Deep coal mines	1,113	288,000	213,700
Shipbuilding and repairing	361	139,000	91,300
Iron and steel industry	221
Steel tubes	222
Drawing, cold rolling and cold forming of steel	223	281,200	146,700
			December 1984
Supporting services to sea transport	763	61,500	39,700

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish his estimates for the years 1983-84 and 1984-85 of the number of school-leavers who have refused every offer of a place on the youth training scheme at 31 March, after the September of the year in which they left school.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I regret that the information is not available in the precise form requested. However, the number of young people reported to my Department's unemployment benefit service for refusing a youth training scheme place in the period 1 September 1983 to 31 March 1984 was 1,645. The corresponding figure for the period 1 April 1984 to 31 March 1985 was 1,676. As a consequence of those reports, 1,122 young people in the earlier period and 1,162 in the later period had their benefit claims disallowed for unreasonably refusing a youth training scheme place.

NATIONAL FINANCE

VAT (Refund Claims)

Mr. Heddle asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will indicate the number of value added tax refund claims under Customs and Excise notice No. 719 processed for the fiscal years 1983-84 and 1984-85.

Mr. Hayhoe: The numbers of claims under Customs and Excise notice No. 719 by do-it-yourself builders for refund of value added tax processed in the fiscal years specified were:

	Number
1983-84	8,168
1984-85	8,953

EC (Payments)

Mr. Stern asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the payment in June of May non-value added tax own resources to the European Communities.

Mr. Ian Stewart: In accordance with article 10(2) of Council regulation 2891/77, the Commission has invited member states to pay on 20 June instead of 19 July non-VAT own resources collected in May. These own resources consist of agricultural, sugar and isoglucose levies and customs duties. The Government are complying with this request.

An amount of £115 million will be paid on 20 June; the payment of levies and duties on 19 July 1985 which is made under section 2(3) of the European Communities Act 1972 will be reduced by an appropriate amount. There will therefore be no net addition to public expenditure.

Britoil

Mr. Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the costs of the intended sale of shares in Britoil.

Mr. Moore: The Government's intention to sell their residual holding in Britoil was announced on 2 May, at column 246. Pending parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, urgent payments in connection with preliminary and main sale expenses will be met by repayable advances from the Contingencies Fund.

Pension Funds (Investments)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the net annual investment of pension funds in Government stocks and securities of all kinds; what proportion this represents of their total investments; and by what percentage he expects the investment to increase once the state earnings-related pension scheme has been phased out.

Mr. Lawson: Information on pension funds' investments is published in 'Financial Statistics', table 7.14. The level of pension funds' investments in Government stocks and other securities following the phasing-out of the state earnings-related pension scheme will depend on the portfolio behaviour of the funds, on the pattern or yields, on the net increase in the funds available to them, and on the stance of Government policy.

CIVIL SERVICE

Job Dispersal

Mr. Parry asked the Minister for the Civil Service how many Civil Service jobs have been transferred to (a) Liverpool and (b) Merseyside in each year since the implementation of the Hardman report on dispersal of Civil service personnel to the latest available date; and how these figures compare with the original recommendation of the Hardman report.

Mr. Hayhoe: The dispersal programme announced in July 1974 was based on the Hardman report. It included 4,440 posts for transfer to Merseyside, of which 2,467 were for Liverpool. Between July 1974 and April 1979, 40 posts were transferred, 27 of which were to Liverpool.

A revised dispersal programme was announced on 26 July 1979. I refer the hon. Gentleman to my written reply of 28 March for details of progress towards implementation of the Merseyside package. Numbers of posts dispersed for each separate year are not held centrally.

THE ARTS

Exports (Reviewing Committee)

Mr. Faulds asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts when publication is expected of the report of the reviewing committee on the export of works of art in respect of the year ended on 30 June 1984.

Mr. Waldegrave: It is expectd that the report will be published in June 1985.

Galleries (Funding)

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts if, in view of Mr. Paul Getty's gift to the National Gallery in London, he will ensure that galleries in other parts of the United Kingdom receive a greater proportion of next year's public funding.

Mr. Waldegrave: Responsibility for the public funding of galleries other than in England rests not with my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for the Arts but with my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland respectively. As far as my noble friend is concerned, it is not his intention to penalise arts bodies which are successful in attracting private funding.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Social Security Review

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what net increase in expenditure is envisaged when family income supplement is replaced by family credit, at current prices and benefit levels; and how much of this increase in expenditure will be devoted to compensation for the loss of free school meals.

Mr. Newton: No decisions have yet been taken on the rates for family credit. We will provide a range of illustrative figures when the White Paper is published.

Nuclear Installations (Cancer)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list and describe the steps taken by his Department pursuant to recommendation 10 of the report of the advisory group chaired by Sir Douglas Black on the incidence of cancers in the vicinity of nuclear installations in the north-west of England.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Recommendation 10a. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment on 17 June at columns 20-21.

Recommendation 10b Discussions have taken place between officials of our department and others, the National Radiological Protection Board and experts in the field on what additional epidemiological and other human data are required. Some further studies are under way already.

Recommendation 10c Consultation between our Department and authorising Departments on the health consequences of discharges now take place regularly and our officials attend meetings of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee and other relevant Government committees.

Recommendation 10d The establishment of the designated body recommended by Sir Douglas Black's advisory group is still being discussed by the relevant Government Departments and NRPB. We will make a decision on how this is to be implemented soon.

Single Payments

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claimants at his Department's Burnley office received single payment allowances during the last 12 months for which figures are available.

Mr. Whitney: The Department's Burnley office made 9,394 single payments in the year ending 7 May 1985. Figures of how many claimants received payments are not available as some claimants received more than one payment.

War Widows (Pensions)

Mr. Freeman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give statistics for the number of war widows presently receiving war widows' pensions in Great Britain, separating the figures between women widowed (a) before 1973 and (b) since 1973.

Mr. Whitney: There were 66,350 war widows' pensions in payment at 29 March 1985. No details are available of the numbers widowed before and after 1973. Under the war pensions scheme, widows' pensions are paid at the same rate regardless of the date of the service man's death, although widows of service men who served after 1973 and whose death is attributable to service will, without exception, also receive an occupational widows' pension from the Ministry of Defence.

Drug Abuse

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the health authorities that have applied for central funding to support initiatives concerned with drug abuse, indicating which applications have been successful; and if he will list those authorities which have not made an application.

Mr. John Patten: The following health authorities have applied for funding under the central initiative to provide services for drug misusers. Funds have been made available to date to those marked with an asterisk.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much money has been allocated to each of the health regions to help in countering drug abuse; and on what criteria the money was allocated.

Mr. John Patten: The following sums have been allocated to each of the health regions under the central funding initiative for the provision of services for drug misusers.

Region	£
Northern	781,214
Yorkshire	248,449
Trent	486,652
East Anglian	295,569

Oxford	319,905
South Western	317,780
West Midlands	669,627

North Western	453,377

The sums include grants made to voluntary organisations. The criteria on which funds have been allocated include the merits of proposed projects and the extent of the local need for services and the development of a wide range of services.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) which health regions, in which there is a town or city with a population of over 200,000, have had central Government funding to help with the problem of drug abuse;

(2) if he will list the health authorities in which there is a town or city with a population of over 200,000 which do not have a drug information and treatment centre;

(3) what evidence he has of the relative size of the problem of drug abuse in the towns and cities in the United Kingdom that have a population of over 200,000.

Mr. John Patten: Information on the prevalence of drug misuse and existing or planned services for drug misusers in English regions is contained in the report "Drug Misuse: Prevalence and Service Provision", which we have published today. Copies have been placed in the Library.

Health services in other parts of the United Kingdom are the responsibility of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what evidence he has received regarding the incidence of drug abuse in North Staffordshire; and what information and treatment facilities are available.

Mr. John Patten: North Staffordshire drug advisory committee is currently assessing the extent of drug misuse in the district. Patients with drug problems may be treated locally by consultant psychiatrists as part of their general case load or by primary health care teams, or may be referred to the regional addiction unit at All Saints hospital in Birmingham or the personality disorder unit at St. George's hospital, Mid-Staffordshire. Information for drug misusers and their relatives is available from the district's health education department.

We have published a summary of health authority reports on the prevalence of drug misuse, existing services and plans for service development today.

Mr. Haselhurst asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will publish the results of the review of services for drug misusers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The report, entitled "Drug Misuse: Prevalence and Service Provision" has been published today. It contains information provided by health authorities and other agencies on the prevalence of drug misuse and on plans for improving services for drug misusers. The work carried out by health authorities indicates that they share the Government's concern that urgent action should be taken in this field. The Government are grateful to health authorities and other agencies for the effort they have devoted to seeking information on the prevalence of drug misuse and formulating plans for improving services.

However, good services, whether in the statutory or voluntary sector, can never be the whole answer to the problem. The Government will continue to do all they can to restrict the quantities of illegal drugs coming into the country and their distribution here and to make provision for those in need of help. But it is ultimately up to the Community as a whole to help with quelling this evil, helping those who are addicted or might be tempted to experiment.

For their part, the Government consider that the development of services for drug misusers must remain a high priority for the foreseeable future, and I shall continue to monitor their development, through regional health authorities. Ministers will be writing to regional health authorities individually to comment on the progress they have made and to encourage appropriate further action. They intend that there should be multi-agency drug advisory committees for every region and district by the end of 1985.

Hospitals (Infections)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list those serious outbreaks of infection that have occurred in hospitals in each of the last five years that have been reported to the public health laboratory service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall let the right hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any evidence to show that district health authorities operate local policies and procedures concerning control of infection in hospitals which vary significantly from the policies and procedures advised by his Department.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer, Official Report, 6 June, column 231, what criteria were used to distinguish between hospital infections that were considered preventable and not preventable.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The 1981 prevalence study was not designed to investigate the preventability of the infections found.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer, Official Report, 6 June, columns 230-1, about management of outbreaks of hospital infection, if he will explain the meaning of the term somewhat dated in relation to his Department's advice; and if he will give the date when advice on the management of specific outbreaks of infection in hospitals was last issued by his Department, saying what form it took.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Our advice on the management of infection control in hospitals and the management of specific outbreaks is contained in circular RHB(51)100 and HM(59)6. We are preparing to update this advice.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer, Official Report, 6 June, column 231, if he will place a copy of the public health laboratory service prevalence study of hospital acquired infection in the Library.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall arrange for copies to be placed in the Library as soon as possible.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services pursuant to the answer, Official Report, 6 June, column 231, if he will categorise those infections acquired before entry to hospital that were included in the 1981 public health laboratory service study, according to the severity of the infection, its incidence and whether or not it was considered to be preventable.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The prevalence study does not provide the information sought.

Infection Control Nurses

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will request the general managers of the National Health Service regions to ascertain the number of infection control nurses employed in each health authority in their region and to inform him of the total.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have no plans to do so.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he has any plans to extend entitlement to invalid care allowance to married or cohabiting women;

(2) what is his policy in the light of the recent European Economic Community directive on equality of treatment in social security benefits, towards the eligibility of married or cohabiting women for invalid care allowance.

Mr. Whitney: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Barking (Ms. Richardson) on 18 June at column 160.

Pharmaceutical Companies

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what methodology he uses in assessing the allowable level of capital employed by pharmaceutical firms to distinguish between capital employed by them on National Health Service work and that employed on work associated with private prescriptions and general sales list products; and what is his current estimate of the reduction in capital employed which he expects to allow for the current year compared with 1984-85.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Under the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme pharmaceutical companies are required to provide us with an annual detailed statement of capital employed certified by independent accountants. This is analysed between National Health Service medicines and other products. Until we have examined the 1985-86 statements, and made such adjustments as we deem necessary, we cannot say how the capital employed in 1985-86 will compare with 1984-85.

Retirement Pensions

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, under the personal pension plans outlined in the recent Green Paper on social security, administrative responsibility for ensuring that all employees effect a scheme will be placed on employers; and what arrangements he envisages for the unemployed.

Mr. Newton: The proposal is that employers should be responsible for paying the minimum pension contibution to the occupational pension scheme or personal pension scheme chosen by the employee, recovering not more than half of it by deduction from the employee's earnings. Administrative arrangements are among the matters for examination in consultations on the Green Paper proposals.

The unemployed are not covered by the state earnings-related pension scheme and it is not proposed that the requirement to make minimum private provision should extend to them.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 20 June 1985

PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Gorbachev

Q27. Mr. Latham asked the Prime Minister whether she intends to make an official visit to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics to meet Mr. Gorbachev.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Lenzie

Q106. Mr. Hirst asked the Prime Minister if she will pay an official visit to Lenzie.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Chile (Arms Sales)

Q121. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the leakage of official documents about arms sales to Chile and an arrangement with Chile concerning the defence of the Falklands.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General on 11 June, at column 395, about the leakage of official documents about Chile. Mr. Dennis has now been dismissed from the public service. The position on defence co-operation is as described by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces on 17 June, at column 37.

Nurses (Pay)

Q123. Mr. Pavitt asked the Prime Minister if she will, in future, announce any decision made on nurses' pay awards by oral statement.

The Prime Minister: As I explained to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Hodge Hill (Mr. Davis), on 6 June, at column 440, it has been the normal practice under successive Governments to announce decisions on review body reports by written answer, and I see no reason to change that practice.

Engagements

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 20 June.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 20 June.

Mr. Pike asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 20 June.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Food Sales (Unit Pricing)

Mr. Moynihan asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his policy on unit pricing on those foods sold in pre-established quantities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: It is our policy not to extend unit pricing to foods sold in pre-established quantities. For foods sold loose or in random weight pre-packs unit pricing has a role to play in assisting consumers to make value for money comparisons. But for foods which can be sold in pre-established quantities, standardisation of package sizes based on the needs of the consumer is a far better and cheaper method of assisting consumers.

This policy was set out in the Department's explanatory memorandum dated 23 February 1984 on European Community Draft Instrument 4687/84 of 31 January 1984 on consumer protection in the indication of prices of foodstuffs.

Exports

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether exports are now more profitable than they were on average in the years 1973 to 1976.

Mr. Channon: Companies are now more profitable than they were over the period 1973 to 1976. Export prices have risen faster than producer prices generally. Assuming no large differences in costs between production for the home and overseas markets this suggests that exports are now more profitable than they were in 1973 to 1976.

Electronics Industry

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the total financial support for the electronics industry in England from Government or Government-funded sources including grants, loans and subsidies for each of the last five years.

Mr. Pattie: Support for the electronics industry in England, from my Department for each of the last five years, is set out in the table. The sectors of the electronics industry covered are scientific instruments (MLH 354), telegraph and telephone apparatus (MLH 363), radio and electrical companies (MLH 364), broadcast receiving and sound reproduction equipment (MLH 365), electronic computers (MLH 366), radio/radar and electronic capital goods (MLH 367). The figures in the table for RDG relate to electrical engineering as a whole, and include Scotland and Wales.

Payments in £ millions

	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85
Support under Sections 7 & 8 of the Industrial Development Act 1982	8·44	9·46	11·55	18·43	19·36
Research & Development support under Science and Technology Act 1965	20·17	24·71	43·59	63·04	83·18
Regional Development Grants for England, Scotland and Wales for Electricial Engineering	22·34	30·28	40·40	31·51	32·31

Scottish Cables

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will investigate whether the take-over by the South African company Altech of Scottish Cables could affect Britain's responsibilities under the United Nations mandatory arms embargo.

Mr. Channon: The United Kingdom complies fully with its obligations under UN Security Council Resolution 418, which concerns the export of military goods and the transfer of related technology to South Africa. There are no grounds for believing that these obligations were affected by the take-over to which the hon. Member refers, which involved the sale of a United Kingdom subsidiary already located and operating in South Africa.

Nationalised Industries

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many representations he has received about the retail activities of nationalised industries.

Mr. Butcher: A large number of representations have been received relating to the closure of post offices and to the possible improvement of the Post Office's counter services.

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether any examples of unfair competition arising from the retail operations of the nationalised industries have been brought to his attention.

Mr. Butcher: No such examples have been brought to my attention.

Computer Fraud

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has had recent representations from banks, building societies and insurance companies on the subject of computer fraud; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend has received no such representations, and there are hence no grounds for a statement at the present time.

Industrial Development Unit

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry why the number of case officers in the industrial development unit has been reduced from 15 to five; and how this relates to the work load undertaken by the unit.

Mr. Butcher: The industrial development unit appraisal staff complement comprises five deputy directors and 10 case officers, although currently staff in place number five deputy directors and seven case officers. The level of recruitment is dependant on the need to maintain a full workload for individual appraisal teams which is currently below anticipated levels as a result of the moratorium on support for innovation announced by my hon. Friend on 22 November 1984.

Departmental Documents

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry why some documents in his Department are marked "Not for National Audit Officer Eyes"; which documents are so marked and according to which criteria; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: Files which deal with the conduct of the Departments business with the National Audit Office and the Public Accounts Committee are not shown to the NAO. This has been agreed with the National Audit Office on the understanding that these files will be strictly confined to their particular business and marked accordingly. All papers dealing with NAO or PAC business are marked "not for NAO eyes" and placed on the files which are so marked.

I understand that my Department's practice in this respect is similar to that of other Departments.

Coke Ovens, Ravenscraig

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if proposals have now been received by his Department concerning investment by the British Steel Corporation in new coke ovens at the Ravenscraig integrated steel plant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have not yet received BSC's investment proposals for this year.

Steel

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the percentage reduction in British steel-making capacity since 1977; and what have been the corresponding reductions in each of the other European Economic Community steel making nations.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The most recent published information on the percentage reduction in British steel-making capacity since 1977, and the corresponding reductions in the other European Community nations is shown in the following table.

Effective capacity of crude steel production

Country	1977	1984	Reduction per cent.
United Kingdom	28·9	23·6	−18·4
Federal Republic of Germany	67·7	54·7	−19·2

ENERGY

Nationalised Fuel Industries

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether any safeguard exists to prevent the nationalised fuel industries subsidising their retail outlets.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: In response to recommendations by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission both the British Gas Corporation and the electricity supply industry have introduced revised accounting procedures for their appliance retailing activities. These changes necessitated a thorough review of the ways costs were allocated to the activities and the production of revised guidelines on cost allocation. In both cases these allocations are subject to the independent scrutiny of their auditors. At the same time both industries have an objective to operate their retailing on a profitable basis.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Parliamentary and Scientific Conference, Tokyo

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State's participation in the sixth parliamentary and scientific conference of the Council of Europe, held recently in Tokyo.

Sir Keith Joseph: At my request my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State represented the United Kingdom Government at the sixth Parliamentary and Scientific Conference of the Council of Europe which was held in Tokyo on 3-6 June on the theme of "Science and democracy: common values in a dialogue of civilisation". I am glad to report that the United Kingdom was, additionally, strongly and audibly represented by hon. Members of both Houses, by the General Rapporteur and by a keynote speaker. I am informed that the conference was hosted with generous hospitality and great efficiency by the Japanese Government; that it was an invaluable occasion for exchanging views on scientific and technological matters of current concern in the democracies of Western Europe and Japan; and that it helped to strengthen the foundations for continuing and growing co-operation at all levels between the Member Countries. In addition my hon. Friend, who was accompanied by the Chairman of the Advisory Board for the Research Councils Sir David Phillips, took the opportunity of visiting several universities, and Government and industrial research laboratories, to promote the existing good working relations between United Kingdom and Japanese scientists and to explore possibilities for their extension. The text of the conclusions distributed at the close of the conference is as follows; they have yet to be considered by the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe.

Tokyo, 6 June 1985

TEXT ADOPTED

THE SIXTH PARLIAMENTARY AND SCIENTIFIC CONFERENCE

1. Convened by the Council of Europe in Tokyo and Tsukuba 3-6 June 1985 at the invitation of the National Diet of Japan;
2. Following statements by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, Mr. Sakata; by Prime Minister Nakasone, Chairman of the Council for Science and Technology of Japan; by Cabinet Ministers responsible for Science and Technology, International Trade and Industry, Posts and Telecommunications, and Foreign Affairs; and by the President of the House of Councillors, Mr. Kimura;
3. Following a visit to the International Exhibition of Science and Technology at Tsukuba (5 June 1985);
4. Having taken note of the scientific and technological achievements of Japan and of Japanese structures for scientific and technological policy-making;
5. After three days' intensive discussion:
   - —on science and democracy, on their shared attachments to freedom of speech and to concepts of rational discussion, and their place in our respective civilizations,
   - —on technological innovation, on scientific cooperation, and on changing patterns of scientific and technological leadership,
   - —on biological advances and human rights, with especial stress on new and prospective understandings of the human nervous system and the human brain,
   - —on the nature of scientific understanding, of the character of the uncertainty of scientific and technological judgments and on implications to be drawn therefrom for decision procedures on issues arising from impacts of science and technology on our lives, our values and our communities,
   - —on the desirability for building stronger scientific and technological relations between Western Europe and Japan;
6. AGREED on the following perceptions, trends and principles:
   - i. Science provides the foundations for advanced education and technological performance in our societies: similarly, through instrumentation, technology provides the infrastructure for scientific advance;
   - ii. Cooperation and competition — within countries and internationally — are equally essential to the vitality of science: competition in science, in some circumstances, can only be sustained by apparent but nonetheless essential duplication of effort; Competitiveness is a prerequisite for scientific cooperation;
   - iii. The free flow of scientists, knowledge and information between countries is the most effective route to scientific progress; this flow is disproportionately limited between Japan and Western Europe: mechanisms for 'matching funding' should be devised by Governments to offset the cost, to the research councils and scientific academies of Japan and Western Europe, of measures to intensify exchanges and ensure they are of mutual benefit;
   - iv. Scientific advances increasingly make necessary choices which involve ethical judgments on novel, difficult and important issues: there is a risk that legislation, by its nature, is more likely to be restrictive than encouraging;
   - v. The ethical issues raised by rapid developments in technology and natural sciences underlines the need to devote resources to the humanities so as to deepen our knowledge of the inter-action between the natural sciences and the humanities;
   - vi. The character of scientific understanding of nature has greatly changed in the last sixty years: Not all sectors of society in Western Europe have followed this change: This is prejudicial to our understanding of the issues which arise from the ever more pervasive and faster changing impacts of science and technology on our societies: Parliaments must make the ultimate decisions on these issues; they must have adequate information capabilities and resources to prepare these decisions, which beyond a first approximation are not amenable to quasi-judicial procedures of evaluation and inquiry;

vii. In times of rapid scientific and technological change, as much knowledge flows into the academic world from industry and commerce as in the reverse direction: The two worlds must develop stronger links: Industry and commerce will increasingly be looking for flexibility and commitment among the qualities and attitudes of the people it will recruit: Our education systems must correspondingly adapt; this will contribute to alleviating the most serious problem of unemployment from which Western European countries so greatly suffer today;

viii. Today, as the "scientification" of technology proceeds in industry, new avenues of scientific research are opened up: Japan has experience to offer from which the Governments of Western Europe could benefit in reframing research and higher education policies accordingly and similarly closer linkages will be of benefit to Japan;

ix. The future contribution of industrialised countries to the world economy will lie increasingly in the intellectual sphere: In the fast-growing information technology sector, "soft-ware" production has by far the highest growth rate—together with high job-creation potential for people with the appropriate flexibility and sense of commitment to their work: Applications "soft-ware" in particular can benefit the employment market in each of our countries;

x. New information technologies can make citizens' participation more effective: They can help towards more open government and a reasonable balance between representative and direct democracy;

xi. Current trade imbalances between Western Europe and Japan in manufactured products should be reduced so that they do not unduly obscure perceptions of common interests between Western Europe and Japan, nor interfere with the setting-up of arrangements for intensified scientific and technological cooperation;

xii. The fragmentation of Western Europe (regulations, tax obstacles, industrial organisation) greatly inhibits the ability to turn knowledge into marketable products — and thus contribute to reducing unemployment: Major new initiatives will accelerate progress in certain areas and strengthen the need for Western Europe to turn into a true "technological community";

xiii. Political and economic costs of technology embargoes—particularly in electronic products—may be unrealistically high, given rapid rates of technological obsolescence;

xiv. Scientific research and the new technologies must take into account the widespread desire for peace and the need to face the deep problems of developing countries;

7. RECOGNISES the occasion of its meeting — as parliamentary democracy in Japan plays host to parliamentary democracy in Europe—as an expression of shared ideals and values.

8. INTERPRETS Japan's outstanding contribution to the success of the conference as a clear signal of readiness to improve exchanges in science, culture and technology—a signal to which Europe must respond;

9. ENDORSES the following proposals set forth at its closing session by the General Rapporteur:

A. In all countries of the Council of Europe, action should be taken:

i. To ensure that the manifold and serious problems — whether ethical, economic or political — generated through the widening of human choices arising from scientific and technological advances, are examined and decided in a coherent and effective manner at the highest level;

ii. to follow the signal so clearly given by Japan to ensure that scientific and technological links with Japan are strengthened, and inform the Council of Europe accordingly;

iii. make fullest use of the European Science Foundation so that, in addition to its important work of coordinating basic science in Europe, it can ensure the availability of scientists respected throughout Europe to provide advice on policy issues in science and technology to European parliamentary assemblies;

B. The European Parliament should take account of the concerns and interests of the whole of democratic Europe in action which might and should be taken to improve arrangements for integrating scientific and technological advice into decision-making throughout Europe;

C. The Council of Europe should, if necessary by re-allocation of resources:

i. broaden its work so as to be able to discuss issues of general importance arising from the new possibilities opened up by scientific and technological advances — whether in the field of biology (new knowledge of the human brain), in property rights, (information derived from remote sensing) or otherwise;

ii. respond to the need for projecting a more realistic image of the nature of science in the public mind, through concerted action by its steering committees for cultural cooperation and the mass media;

iii. establish a formal link between the 'Parliamentary and Scientific Conferences' and the 'Strasbourg Conferences on Parliamentary Democracy', given the far-reaching implications of the changes now being induced in our societies by scientific advance and technological innovation;

iv. prepare for opportunities which may arise as a result of the Sixth Conference for deepening relationships with Japan, by establishing, as an initial step, means for sustained reflexion on the relevant medium-term scientific and technological policy issues, in liaison with the Committee on Science and Technology of the Parliamentary Assembly and the 'Parliamentary and Scientific Conferences', together with OECD and the European Science Foundation.

Teachers' Superannuation Scheme

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what projection he has made of the likely change in the financial burden on serving teachers in future years up to 2025, arising from their contributions in support of the teachers' superannuation scheme in the light of the anticipated numbers of living retired teachers in the period; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The level of teachers' contributions is governed by the Teachers' Superannuation Regulations 1976 and stands at 6 per cent. of salary. It is not related to the numbers of living retired teachers in the period up to 2025.

Special Education

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science why expenditure on special education is projected to fall by 8·42 per cent. between 1984-85 and 1986-87.

Mr. Dunn: The Government's plans for the distribution between services of local authority current expenditure in 1986-87 are provisional; and hence the projection of special schools expenditure within the education total is also provisional. A reduction in real terms expenditure is projected to occur partly because the number of pupils in special schools is falling. The Government also believe that there is some scope for reducing expenditure per pupil; it is encouraging the rationalisation of special schools in the interests of better education and a more effective deployment of resources.

School Books

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what monitoring process his Department uses to ensure that text books used in schools contain nothing of a salacious, blasphemous or subliminal political nature.

Mr. Dunn: The Department does not seek to monitor the teaching materials used in schools; decisions on such matters are for the schools themselves. We expect teachers to behave with due professional responsibility in this regard; any parent who is concerned about the use of a particular book should not hesitate to take the matter up with the school's headteacher and if necessary with the local education authority an ultimately with my right hon. Friend.

School Meals

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many children are currently entitled to free school meals; and what percentage of those entitled to free school meals take up their entitlement.

Mr. Dunn: The only figures on free school meals collected centrally for English local education authorities are for those pupils actually taking a free meal on the day of the annual census, the report on which is available in the Library. It is estimated that about two thirds to three quarters of those mandatorily entitled to a free meal take up the entitlement.

Dental Students

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many dental students there were in England and Wales in each of the last 20 years per head of population; and how many student grants there were to dental students per head of population for the same dates.

Mr. Brooke: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

ENVIRONMENT

Structure Plans

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average length of time for structure plans approved since 1980 between the completion of the examinations in public into those plans and the announcement of the draft modifications and publication of the panel's report.

Mr. Macfarlane: In the case of structure plans and structure plan alterations approved since 1 January 1980, following an examination in public, the average length of time between the completion of the examination in public and the publication of proposed modifications and the panel's report was 10 months.

Recycled Stationery

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will indicate (a) when his Department started using recycled stationery, (b) how many tonnes of recycled paper his Department has used in the past 12 months for which figures are available and (c) what percentage of total paper stationery consumption this represents over that period.

Sir George Young: The first delivery of an order for 6 tonnes of recycled letter-headed paper and matching envelopes took place in November 1984. Since then, 1·5 tonnes have been distributed to officials, but it is not possible to say how much of this has been used. Figures for total paper stationery consumption are not readily available.

Other items of stationery containing an element of recycled paper have been used for several years.

Pollution

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, in the light of the national road traffic forecasts predicting a growth of 20 to 50 per cent. in road traffic by the end of the century, the controls on vehicle emissions agreed by the Council of Environment Ministers' meetings in March will result in an improvement in air quality in the United Kingdom by the year 2000.

Mr. Gow: Although the Council of Environment Ministers agreed a broad framework on 20 March for stricter standards for vehicle emissions, the limit values for large and medium cars have yet to be agreed. It is not possible to say what further regulations might be in force and what effect vehicle emissions will have on air quality in 15 years' time.

Car Boot Sales

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to confer upon local authorities the power to control and regulate car boot sales.

Mr. Macfarlane: The General Development Order 1977 allows the use of land for car boot sales for up to 14 days in total in any calendar year. However, in any particular case a local planning authority may, by the making of a direction under article 4 of the order, withdraw this general permission, and thus bring the activity concerned within normal planning control. For such a direction to remain in force for longer than six months the Secretary of State's approval is required.

Local Authorities (Capital Expenditure)

Mr. Hargreaves asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total supplementary capital allocation issued to those local authorities which exercised restraint on capital expenditure in 1984-85.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The total issued up to 18 June is £37,566,000 to 161 authorities. A final total will not be known until all local authorities' expenditure returns have been received and analysed.

Mr. Ken Hargreaves asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how much supplementary capital allocation remains to be made to those local authorities who exercised restraint on capital expenditure in 1984-85 following the supplementary allocation of 5 per cent. of the aggregate of the basic allocations for 1985-86 for the five service blocks covered by the main national cash limits;

(2) how many local authorities exercised restraint, in accordance with his request, on capital expenditure in 1984-85.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: This information is not yet available, since the expenditure returns from some local authorities have still to be received and analysed.

The supplementary allocations apply to the five service blocks covered by the main cash limit for local authority capital expenditure in England.

Pesticides

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek information on which local authorities have banned the use of the chemical 2,4,5-T.

Mr. Macfarlane: Local authorities have no powers to ban the general use of chemicals. However, I am aware that some local authorities have decided not to purchase and use for weed control, products containing 2,4,5-T. The view of the Government's Advisory Committee on Pesticides is that 2,4,5-T is safe when used according to the instructions. Bearing this in mind and the fact that local authority usage is relatively small, a comprehensive survey of local authority use would not be justified.

Falklands Islands

Mr. Dixon asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest figure of the number of civilians working on the Falkland Islands airport construction project; and what information he has as to how many came originally from the northern region.

Sir George Young: As at May 1985, 2,788 civilians were employed by contractors engaged on the Mount Pleasant airport project in the Falkland Islands and the associated project to provide garrison facilities and a port. A further 54 civilians were employed on these projects by PSA. No specific records are kept of the United Kingdom regional origins of these civilians.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Population

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the prison population was on 31 May.

Mr. Mellor: On 31 May 1985 about 46,300 persons were held in prison department establishments in England and Wales.

Juveniles (Adult Prisons)

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many juveniles were accommodated in adult prisons (a) on remand and (b) under sentence on the most recent convenient date.

Mr. Mellor: The latest available information is given in the following table. It is normal for young males to be kept apart from adult males whereas in establishments for females, women and girls may mix.

Persons aged under 17 held in adult prisons in England and Wales on 31 March 1985: by type of prisoner

*Number

Sri Lankan Tamils

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Sri Lankan Tamils who have arrived in the United Kingdom since 20 April (a) have been refused entry and (b) are currently awaiting a decision; and of those who have been accepted into the United Kingdom, how many Tamils have been accepted as refugees on an exceptional basis respectively.

Mr. Waddington: Figures are readily available only from the beginning of May. Since then some 1,330 Sri Lankan Tamils have arrived at United Kingdom ports and sought asylum. So far, decisions have been taken in respect of some 200, of whom one has been recognised as a refugee, 27 have been granted leave to enter exceptionally and the remainder have been refused leave to enter.

Sikhs (Political Asylum)

Mr. Bidwell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of Sikhs who arrived in the United Kingdom over the past 12 months claiming political asylum; and how many claims were approved.

Mr. Waddington: The relevant statistics are recorded only by nationality of the applicant. According to provisional figures, 65 applications for asylum were received from Indian citizens in the 12 months up to 31 May 1985; and during the same period none was granted.

Tamils (Political Asylum)

Mr. Bidwell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of Tamils arriving in the United Kingdom over the last six months claiming political asylum; if his Department maintains any record of the places where such claimants reside whilst their claims are being considered; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: In the 12 months ending on 30 April 1985 some 350 Sri Lankan nationals are recorded as having sought asylum or expressed a fear of return upon arrival at a United Kingdom port. These records do not identify Tamils separately.

Since 1 May 1985 1,330 Sri Lankan Tamils are recorded as having sought asylum or expressed a fear of return on arrival. No central record is maintained of addresses to which those granted temporary admission proceed.

Computer Fraud

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to introduce legislation to strengthen precautions against computer fraud; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to his Question on 17 June at column 10.

Children (Offences)

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many children have been convicted of offences relating to section 56 of the British Transport Commission Act 1949; what was the average sentence for (a) the Billericay petty sessional area, (b) Essex, and (c) for England and Wales for each of the past five years;

(2) how many children were charged with offences relating to section 56 of the British Transport Commission Act 1949 for (a) the Billericay petty sessional area, (b) Essex, and (c) for England and Wales for each of the past five years;

(3) on how many occasions compensation orders have been made on parents of children convicted of offences relating to section 56 of the British Transport Commission Act 1949 in (a) the Billericay petty sessional area, (b) Essex, and (c) in England and Wales for each of the past five years.

Mr. David Mellor: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Video Works (Classification)

Mr. Parris asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) in what respect his proposals for the designation of persons to act as the authority responsible for making arrangements for the classification of video works under the Video Recordings Act 1984 differ from the arrangements anticipated at the time the Bill was in Standing Committee; and why the changes have been made;

(2) why he has altered the particulars of his proposals for the designation of persons to act as the authority responsible for making arrangements for the classification of video works under the Video Recordings Act 1984; and whether he will make a statement;

(3) why it was necessary to withdraw and relay his proposals for the designation of persons to act as the authority responsible for making arrangements for the classification of video works under the Video Recordings Act 1984.

Mr. Mellor: As indicated during the passage through Parliament of the Video Recordings Bill, my right hon. and learned Friend's intention was to designate the principal officers of the British Board of Film Censors (as it then was). Accordingly, his initial proposals provided for the designation of the Earl of Harewood, Lord Birkett, Miss Monica Sims and Mr. James Ferman (respectively President, Vice-Presidents and Director of the British Board of Film Classification). After laying these proposals, he learned from Mr. Ferman's colleagues that contrary to our earlier understanding, it had not been possible to secure the consent of Mr. Ferman (who was abroad during the relevant period). To enable the designation to take effect this summer — which means that proposals must lie before parliament for 40 days (as required by section 5 of the Video Recordings Act 1984) before the summer adjournment — my right hon. and learned Friend laid modified proposals on Friday 14 June providing for the designation of the Earl of Harewood, Lord Birkett and Miss Sims.

Metropolitan Police (Truncheons)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many long (65 cm.) truncheons have been issued to the Metropolitan police; and to which districts.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that no 65 cm. truncheons are issued to his officers. Long truncheons (91 cm.) are issued to officers of the mounted branch while those issued to other officers are of 32 cm. or 40 cm. Truncheons of different lengths and design have been evaluated but none of these have been issued for operational use.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what checks are made to ensure that Metropolitan police officers do not use other than standard issue truncheons; and how many have been found in possession of such weapons since January 1980.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that uniformed constables produce their truncheons to a senior officer when they are briefed for duty. When any officer has occasion to use or draw his truncheon he is required to submit it for inspection by his station officer as soon as practicable. No central record is keep of instances of officers being found in possession of truncheons that are not of standard issue.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the defensive role of truncheons, outlined in Metropolitan Police Instruction Book (ch. 10) and Stones Justices Manual (p. 36), applies in all circumstances.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that all truncheons are issued for use in a defensive role.

Notifiable Crimes

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of notifiable criminal offences which were recorded by the West Midlands police constabulary and the Metropolitan police force in each single year since 1979.

Mr. Mellor: Statistics of notifiable offences recorded by the police in each police force area are published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales" (Tables 2.4-2·7 of the volume for 1983, Cmnd. 9349). Corresponding figures for 1984 were published in a Home Office Statistical Bulletin, Issue 6/85, on 12 March 1985.

Police (Additional Resources)

Mr. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what additional resources he intends to make available to the West Midlands and Metropolitan police forces to enable them to deploy greater manpower.

Mr. Giles Shaw: It is for the West Midlands police authority to determine the police budget. Fifty per cent. of the authority's expenditure will be met by the Home Office through police grant.

The Metropolitan Police cash limit of £763·184 million which, as police authority for the Metropolis, my right hon. and learned Friend announced to the House on 14 February at column 237 represents an increase of 5 per cent. on the equivalent figure for 1984-85 and allows for an increase of 50 police and 132 civil staff posts to bring the police establishment to 27,165 and the civil staff ceiling to 13,482.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

American Bar Association

Mr. Bright asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will make a statement about access to Westminster Hall during the inaugural session of the Assembly of the American Bar Association on Monday 15 July.

Mr. Biffen: Westminster Hall will be closed to Members' parties on Friday 12 July and on Monday 15 July. Arrangements are in hand to ensure that Members are inconvenienced as little as possible. Notices will be published in the all-party Whip this week and next.

DEFENCE

Training Land

Mr. Maclean asked the Secretary of State for Defence how much land he has already purchased at Warcop since 1979 for dry training purposes; and to what extent such land is contiguous to the present range.

Mr. Lee: We have purchased some 36 acres of land at Warcop for dry training in two lots since 1979. The larger of these, a 35-acre field, is connected with the existing range by the smaller, a 7m-wide strip, which is used for access purposes only.

Mr. Maclean asked the Secretary of State for Defence what studies have been carried out into the potential use of land to the north west and south east of the present firing posts on Warcop ranges for the purposes of dry training.

Mr. Lee: None.

Mr. Maclean asked the Secretary of State for Defence what studies have been made of the use of land at Spadeadam for infantry dry training areas.

Mr. Lee: Infantry dry training is already carried out at Spadeadam.

Mr. Maclean asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy that orienteering and map reading exercises undertaken on the land he proposes to purchase at Warcop for dry training will be wholly confined within the boundaries of the dry training area.

Mr. Lee: It is our policy that dry training exercises, including orienteering and map reading, may be undertaken outside military training area boundaries subject to the prior agreement of private landowners.

Cruise Missiles

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether Her Majesty's Government have been consulted by the United States Administration about current improvements in the range and capability of cruise missiles based in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: I understand from the United States authorities that no such improvements that are of material significance are currently being made.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether Her Majesty's Government have been consulted about changes in the targeting arrangements for United States Air Force ground-launched cruise missiles stationed in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Deakins) on 17 January 1985, at column 185.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence if Her Majesty's Government will make it their policy not to accede to any request from the Administration of the United States of America for either temporary or permanent United Kingdom basing facilities for United States Air Force B-52 strategic bombers, carrying, or equipped to carry, air-launched cruise missiles; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if Her Majesty's Government have received any representations from any branch of the United States Administration with regard to the possible provision of temporary or permanent United Kingdom basing facilities for United States Air Force B-52 strategic bomber aircraft, of any category, equipped with, or with the capability to carry, internal or external air-launched cruise missiles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: I have nothing to add to the answer my right hon. Friend gave the hon. Member on 18 June 1984.

United States Air Force

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the operational purpose of stationing seven United States Air Force B-52G strategic bombers at RAF Fairford; on how many occasions in the last five years the number of United States Air Force aircraft stationed here has exceeded this figure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: This is a temporary deployment, from 24 May to 20 June. A series of such deployments of B52 aircraft take place each year in support of NATO exercises and are designed to test the United States Air Force's conventional capability in the NATO area. Previous such deployments have been on a smaller scale: the present, larger, deployment is of greater training value.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the number of deployments of United States Air Force aircraft at RAF airfields in the United Kingdom for the years 1982, 1983, 1984 and the numbers planned for 1985.

Mr. Lee: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the operational purpose of the stationing of United States Air Force A-7 attack aircraft at RAF Waddington; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: 36 USAF A7 Corsair aircraft were temporarily deployed to RAF Waddington from 11 May to 8 June 1985. This was a routine training deployment, designed to familiarise USAF aircrew with operations in European airspace.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the operational purpose of the proposed stationing of United States Air Force F-4D Phantom aircraft at RAF Lossiemouth in the autumn of 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: A temporary exercise deployment is under consideration but no decision has been reached.

Private Security Firms

Mr. Hicks asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to introduce private security firms to undertake security and fire-guarding responsibilities at 10 military victualling and stores depots, including Wilcove, Torpoint; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The acceptability and cost-effectiveness of using contractors to undertake such tasks are under study. There will be full consultation with the trades unions concerned before decisions are reached.

Molesworth

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the Property Services Agency's map of Molesworth was released for publication; whether publication of this kind of material is normal practice; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: A plan indicating the boundary of the protected area of RAF Molesworth was published when draft byelaws for the establishment were advertised for public comment on 25 February 1985. The normal practice is for byelaws relating to military lands to have a plan of the area attached in order to assist the public.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence to what specifications the Property Services Agency worked in the design of Molesworth's bunkers and the remainder of the base.

Mr. Lee: The works at RAF Molesworth will be constricted to the relevant NATO specifications and USAF requirements. They will comply with all United Kingdom domestic building standards and health and safety legislation.

Alconbury and Upwood

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the numbers of civil servants employed at USAF/RAF Alconbury and Upwood for each year from 1980.

Mr. Lee: The total number of MOD and PSA civil servants employed at RAF Alconbury is 373, and at RAF Upwood, 16. In 1980 there were 299 civil servants at RAF Alconbury; in 1981, 305; in 1982, 345; in 1983, 381 and in 1984, 383. The figures for RAF Upwood are a total of four civil servants employed from 1980 to 1982 inclusive then 12 in 1983 and 14 in 1984.

Airborne Early Warning System

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the implications for the Nimrod airborne early warning programme of the proposed joint development of an airborne early warning system by General Electric Company, Marconi and Lockheed.

Mr. Butler [pursuant to his reply, 17 June 1985, c. 38-39]: GEC Avionics has assured officials of my Department, and is being asked to confirm in writing, that any work by this company on a variant of the mission system avionics under development for the Nimrod AEW would have no adverse effect on the Nimrod AEW programme.

EMPLOYMENT

Job Creation

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Employment what were the net gains or losses in jobs in (a) manufacturing industries, (b) mining, (c) railways, (d) steel and shipbuilding and (e) service industries in England in each of the last five years.

Mr. Alan Clark: Information about job gains and job losses is not available from the Department's statistics, but an indication of the net changes can be seen by comparing levels of employees in employment at different dates.

The tables give the change in the number of employees in employment between December each year for the period specified, analysed according to the 1980 Standard Industrial Classification (SIC).

Table 1 gives information about manufacturing industries and service industries in England, while table 2 gives corresponding details of the other industries, but for Great Britain. Information for England is not available for these industries.

Table 1 Employees in Employment—England (thousands)

Labour Statistics

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were employed in the electronics industry in England in 1979 and the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Alan Clark: The table gives, for Great Britain (figures for England are not available), the estimated number of employees in employment in June 1979 and April 1985 in the electronics industries specified. The figures for April 1985 are provisional.

Employees in employment—Great Britain

1980 Standard Industrial Classification	June 1979	April 1985
Electronic data processing equipment (Activity Heading 3302)	49,900	70,400
Telecommunications equipment, electrical measuring equipment, electronic capital goods and passive electronic components (Group 344)	208,000	200,600
Other electronic equipment (Group 345)	149,700	132,700
Total of above	407,700	403,700

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number of young people who have become unemployed and who have registered at unemployment offices in each travel-to-work area in Lancashire for the last 12-month period for which figures are available.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is in the Library. The table shows the numbers of occasions a person under 18 became an unemployed claimant over the period May 1984 to May 1985 for each old travel-to-work area in Lancashire. Many of these new claimants will have since ceased to claim benefit. The number unemployed, under 18, in each travel-to-work area at the beginning and end of the period is also given in the table. The figures exclude those unemployed persons whose claims are not dealt with by computer. Information for the new travel-to-work areas will be available shortly.

Old travel-to-work area	Number of Claims May 1984-May 1985	Total unemployed under 18 years of age

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in (i) Coventry, (ii) the west midlands and (iii) nationally have been unemployed (a) between one and two years, (b) between two and three years, (c) between three and four years, (d) between four and five years, (e) between five and six years, (f) between six and seven years and (g) more than seven years.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is in the Library. The figures relate to 11 April 1985, the latest date for which the available information on unemployment by duration is produced.

Unemployed Claimants 11 April 1985

Duration of unemployment	Former Coventry Travel-to-Work-Area	West Midlands Region	United Kingdom

over five years	1,620	16,298	136,254

Pesticides

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Employment what information is available to his Department about which countries currently ban the use of the chemical 2,4,5-T or 2,4-D.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A complete list of countries which have banned the chemical 2,4,5-T or 2,4-D is not available. Information is available from the "Consolidated List of Products whose Consumption and/or Sale have been Banned, Withdrawn, Severely Restricted or Not Approved by Governments". This list is prepared by the United Nations Secretariat in response to General Assembly resolution 37/137.

Factory Inspectorate (Prosecutions)

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list, for each of the last 10 years, and at 1985 prices, the average penalty imposed following a prosecution by the factory inspectorate.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The average penalty imposed on conviction following a prosecution by Her Majesty's Factory Inspectorate for each of the last 10 years relative to the retail prices index at 1 January 1985 is as follows:

Average penalty relative to 1 January 1985 prices

Youth Training Scheme

Mrs. René Short asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of companies located in the west midlands region who are presently employing young people within the framework of the youth training scheme.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Employment what are the reasons for the recent decision to enter into a lease for additional office accommodation at Sunley buildings, Manchester; and whether any of the additional accommodation will be required for the Department of Environment staff after the abolition of the Greater Manchester Council.

Sir George Young: I have been asked to reply.

Two additional floors in Sunley buildings, Manchester were taken by PSA for Department of Trade and Industry, which is rationalising its organisation following recent changes. The Department of Environment has not sought any additional accommodation in Sunley buildings.

WALES

Education Expenditure

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the present per pupil expenditure on books and on equipment in (a) primary schools, (b) special schools and (c) secondary schools; and what are the comparable figures for each of the last five years in cash terms and real terms using 1984-85 prices and using an index of 100 for 1979-80.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: The latest available figures relate to 1983-84. Figures at constant prices have therefore been expressed at 1983-84 prices.

Expenditure (£'s per pupil) on books and equipment, at outturn prices

Pupil-teacher Ratio

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the latest pupil-teacher ratio for Wales, excluding head teachers.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The overall pupil-teacher ratio in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools in Wales in January 1984 was 17·3. If, exceptionally, headteachers are excluded from the calculation, it is estimated that the ratio would be 18·7.

Welsh Water Authority (Contracts)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many main contracts have been awarded by the Welsh water authority in each year since 1979; and how many companies to which contracts were awarded had their main offices in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This is a matter for the Welsh water authority. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Gentleman.

Dyfed Education Authority

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he plans to seek to ensure that Dyfed education authority takes corrective action in response to criticism in Her Majesty's inspectors' report of 14 June with regard to deficiencies in the authority's provision for pupils with average and below average ability; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Reports by Her Majesty's Inspectorate on individual educational institutions or education generally within a local education authority area are sent to the appropriate county council with a formal request for details of the action the authority proposes to take on matters raised in the report. This standard practice has applied in respect of the report on educational provision in Dyfed local education authority published on 14 June.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Drug Addicts

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what National Health Service facilities are now available for the treatment of drug addicts in Lancashire.

Mr. John Patten: Drug misusers in Lancashire may receive NHS treatment locally from primary health care teams or the general psychiatric services, or they may be referred to the regional drug dependency unit at Prestwich hospital, Salford. In addition, community drug problem teams are currently being set up in four Lancashire districts and the North Western regional health authority intends that such teams should be set up in the remaining districts within the next two years. More information on this is contained in the report "Drug Misuse: Prevalence and Service Provision", copies of which are in the Library.

Nuclear Installations (Down's Syndrome)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps have been taken by his Department to investigate the possible increased incidence of Down's syndrome in relation to nuclear installations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We continually examine available evidence. The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys monitors monthly returns from health authorities of congenital malformations and, in response to allegations of a high incidence of Down's syndrome around Sellafield last year, undertook a detailed scrutiny of statistics for that area. There is no evidence from this monitoring to relate the incidence of Down's syndrome to the presence of a nuclear installation. We are not aware of any well documented studies that link Down's syndrome with radioactivity from nuclear installations.

Board and Lodging Payments

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information was used to determine the exemption categories to the restrictions on board and lodging claims by under 26-year-olds provided under the Supplementary Benefit (Requirements and Resources) Miscellaneous Provisions Regulations 1985.

Mr. Whitney: In determining the list of exemption categories we had regard to the suggestions of the Social Security Advisory Committee, representations made both to the Committee during the consultation period and subsequently to Ministers and the advice of Government Departments.

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information was used to determine the weekly upper limits for ordinary board and lodging claims provided under the Supplementary Benefit (Requirements and Resources) Regulations 1985.

Mr. Whitney: The new board and lodging limits were determined after consideration of the existing local limits for ordinary board and lodging accommodation and in the light of information available to the Government from sample surveys on the charges being made for that accommodation. In setting them we also had regard to what we considered was a reasonable amount for supplementary benefit to pay.

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what basis was used to determine the time limits on board and lodging claims by under-26-year-olds provided under the Supplementary Benefit (Requirements and Resources) Miscellaneous Provisions Regulations 1985.

Mr. Whitney: The time limits were based on the periods we considered would be reasonable to give young people an opportunity to seek work in any one area based on the Department of Employment's 'travel to work' areas. The intention was not to allow them to settle down long-term in generally expensive accommodation.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish the results of the special exercise undertaken in parallel with the December 1983 annual statistical inquiry and of the local office inquiry carried out in April-May 1984 concerning the effects of the November 1983 changes in board and lodging charges.

Mr. Whitney: The results of the special exercise carried out in parallel with the 1983 annual statistical inquiry are not yet available. The local office inquiry carried out in May 1984 was a sample survey only of cases in some 40 local offices. It gave information on the circumstances of individual claimants, including their board and lodging charge, and is therefore not appropriate to be published.

American Medical International

Mr. J. Enoch Powell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what discussions he has had with American Medical International.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We consider that the independent health sector makes an important contribution to the health care facilities which are available, and that it is important for us to keep in touch with the major operators in this field. Consequently, Ministers and officials have frequent contacts with American Medical International and other large private health care companies to discuss matters of mutual interest.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to ensure that once an attendance allowance is awarded, payment will be backdated to the time of the relevant medical examination.

Mr. Newton: The date from which an attendance allowance award is payable is a matter for the independent adjudicating authorities. It is usually payable either from the date of claim or the date on which the six months qualifying condition is satisfied, whichever is later. The date of the medical examination is not a significant factor in the award. If the right hon. Member has a particular difficulty in mind I shall be pleased to look into it.

Population Statistics

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the population change in the 15 to 24 year age group between 1975 and 1984 in the United Kingdom; and whether he has any information about the comparable figures for the United States of America.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is as follows:

	Population aged 15 to 24 years		Change mid-1975 to mid-1984
	mid-1975	mid-1984	Number	Percentage
United Kingdom	8,003,000	9,285,000	+1,282,000	+16·0
United States of America	40,540,000	40,078,000	−462,000	−1·1

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the change in the numbers reaching retirement age in the United Kingdom between 1975 and 1984; and whether he has any information about the comparable figures for the United States of America.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is as follows:

	Number of persons reaching retirement age in the year to*		Change mid-1975 to mid-1984
	Mid 1975	Mid 1984	Number	Percentage
United Kingdom	622,000	540,000	−82,000	−13·2
United States of America	1,847,000	2,138,000	+291,000	+15·8

* Age 65 for males and age 60 for females

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will withdraw the regulations which require that unemployment benefit shall be refused to any applicant who has accepted redundancy as part of a national industrial arrangement.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why he is not planning to monitor the price of drugs not now available under the National Health Service since the introduction of the limited list.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Because we are only responsible for the National Health Service.

Housing Benefit

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the levels of housing benefit payments which have been made available to single families in each year since 1979.

Mr. Whitney: It is estimated that expenditure on housing benefit received by lone parents is as follows:

1982-83	80
1983-84	370
1984-85	430

The information for 1982-83 relates to the partial start of housing benefit from November 1982. Information relating to the former rent rebate and allowance and rent rebate schemes is not easily available.

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate how many local staff of his Department will be fully involved in housing benefit work if the proposals of the review of social security are fully implemented.

Mr. Newton: This cannot be assessed until detailed procedures for administering the new scheme are decided.

Social Security Review

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received from managing directors of businesses in the west Midlands region about administration of family-credit resulting from his new social security proposals.

Mr. Whitney: We are not aware of any such representations.

Doctors (Hours)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what specific steps he intends to take to reduce the hours presently worked by junior doctors in National Health Service hospitals; and what discussions he intends to have about this with representatives of the medical profession and local health authorities.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My reply of 23 May to the hon. Member for Warrington, North (Mr. Hoyle) at columns 538-9 outlined the action we have taken or have in hand to reduce junior doctors' hours. I have placed copies in the Library of a detailed report, which we have recently sent to the Social Services Select Committee. We are continuing to monitor progress, and we shall also co-operate with the independent survey of juniors' hours commissioned by the Review Body on Doctors' and Dentists' Remuneration.

NHS (Training Seminars)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many seminars have been organised jointly by the National Health Service training authority and the British Medical Association for the purpose of persuading clinicians to enter health service management; in what regions of England and Wales these have taken place; what proportion of them were attended by officials of his Department; and how many clinicians have so far been appointed as managers in the National Health Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Fifteen such seminars have been held, one in each English region and one in Wales. A medical officer from our Department attended the seminar held in Birmingham.

To date one doctor has been appointed as a regional general manager and 13 doctors have been appointed as district general managers.

Consultants

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of wholly unoccupied consultant posts, consultant posts occupied by locums, consultant posts wholly unoccupied and not occupied by a permanent holder for 12 months or more and consultant posts occupied by locums and not occupied by a permanent holder for 12 months or more in the National Health Service, which were recorded by his Department on 30 September 1984, were in the west midlands region.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The information requested is as follows:

Whole time equivalent of consultant posts vacant or without a permanent holder in West Midlands region and England—September 1984

	West Midlands	England	Proportion in West Midlands (per cent.)
(i) Wholly unoccupied	110	703	16
(ii) Occupied by locums	15	174	9
(iii) Posts unoccupied by a permanent holder for 12 months or more:
(a) wholly unoccupied	39	325	12
(b) occupied by locums	6	69	9

Doctors (Drug References)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what resources he intends to make available to provide general practitioners greater reference facilities to the European and British Pharmacopoeia and the British Pharmaceutical Codex.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: None.

National Alcohol Forum

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what level of financial support his Department intend to give to the National Alcohol Forum.

Mr. John Patten: Officials of this Department have recently held informal discussions with interested bodies about the proposal contained in the Health Departments' discussion document "Drinking Sensibly", to establish an Alcohol Forum. The question of financial support for a forum is one of a number of matters which will be the subject of further discussions.

Alcoholism

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which representatives of brewers, whisky distillers and wine and spirit merchants and charities met recently at his Department to discuss steps to take to curb alcoholism.

Mr. John Patten: The bodies represented, were the Brewers' Society, the Scotch Whisky Association, the Wine and Spirits Association, the Health Education Council and Alcohol Concern.

Dentists

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many dentists there are in England and Wales per head of population.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: As at 30 September 1984 there were approximately 0·36 dentists (that is, general dental practitioners and members of the hospital and community dental services) per 1,000 population in England and Wales.

Teeth

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of adults in England and Wales have had all their natural teeth removed or extracted.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The 1978 survey of adult dental health in England and Wales indicated that 29 per cent. of the population aged 16 and over had no natural teeth.

Industrial Injuries Scheme

Mr. Dixon asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to extend the industrial injuries scheme to workers injured in the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Newton: There are regulations in force in the Falkland Islands covering workmen's compensation for industrial injuries. I understand the hon. Member may have a particular case of injury in mind. I am seeking further information about this, and will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Stanley Royd Hospital, Wakefield

Mrs. Reneé Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects the investigation being presently conducted by the Health and Safety executive into the food poisoning at the Stanley Royd hospital in Wakefield to be concluded; and if he will publish its findings in the Official Report.

Mr. John Patten: We are not aware of any investigation of this outbreak by the Health and Safety Executive. Mr. John Hugill is chairman of the committee of inquiry that my right hon. Friend set up into the outbreak and the public hearings of oral evidence were completed on 17 May. We have undertaken to publish the findings of the Committee. We are awaiting its report.

Hospitals (Infection Rates)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the post surgical infection rate in National Health Service hospitals in each year since 1979.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 13 June 1985, c. 557.] The available information is given in the table.

NHS hospitals*

Year	Estimated number of inpatient cases with a diagnosis of post-operative infection as percentage of all in-patient cases who undergo operations
England and Wales
1979	0·7
1980	0·7
1981	0·7
England
1982	0·8
1983 (provisional)	0·8

* Excluding psychiatric and maternity hospitals and units

Tinnitus

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current level of spending on research into the causes and cure of tinnitus and how that compares with 1979.

Mr. Brooke: I have been asked to reply.

The Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid through the Department, is the main Government agency for the promotion of medical research in the United Kingdom. I understand that in the financial year 1983-84 MRC's expenditure on research on tinnitus was £160,000 compared with £118,000 in the financial year 1981-82. No comparable figures on this condition are available prior to 1981-82, nor as yet for 1984-85.

The council is always willing to consider soundly based research proposals for support through its grant schemes in competition with other applications.

In addition to the work supported by the MRC, at the Institute of Hearing Research and elsewhere, research work on, and relevant to, tinnitus may also be conducted in universities and medical schools using funds allocated for teaching and research on the advice of the University Grants Committee, but details of such work are not collected centrally. The medical charities may also be conducting work in the field.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Lebanon

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has recently made to the United Nations on the situation in the Lebanon.

Mr. Luce: We supported United Nations Security Council resolution No. 564 of 31 May calling on all parties to help alleviate the suffering resulting from recent violence in Lebanon. We remain in close touch with the United Nations Secretary-General and others concerned.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what priority Her Majesty's Government are currently giving to the establishment of a 200-mile exclusive fishing zone around the Falklands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: We are working actively for the establishment of a multilaterally-based fisheries conservation and management regime around the Falkland Islands.

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any amendments have been made to Statutory Instruments numbers 277 and 1624 of 1978; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Malcolm Rifkind: Statutory Instrument 277 of 1978 has been amended by Statutory Instruments Nos. 1034 of 1978 and 1895 of 1978 and Statutory Instrument No. 1671 of 1981. Statutory Instrument No. 1624 of 1978 has been amended by Statutory Instrument No. 1894 of 1978.

Mr. Ewen Fergusson (American Visit)

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whom Mr. Ewen Fergusson, deputy under-secretary at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, met when he visited the United States of America to discuss developments in South Africa earlier in 1985.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 17 June at column 34.

Business International Conference (Ministerial Speech)

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will arrange for the text of the speech by the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Pentlands (Mr. Rifkind) to the Business International conference in London on 6 June, to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Rifkind: This is not possible. My speech, which was a restatement of existing Government policy, was made without a prepared text.

Victims Against Terrorism

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether officials from his Department met representatives of the organisation Victims Against Terrorism in the week beginning 20 May; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the Member for Swansea, East (Mr. Anderson) on 11 June 1985 at column 416.

Racal

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will investigate possible violations of Statutory Instrument 277 of 1978 by Racal in providing licences to Grinaker Holdings Ltd. for the manufacture of military equipment in South Africa and Plessey as a result of its provision of technology to South African Micro Electronic Systems.

Mr. Rifkind: If the hon. Member has any information bearing on his question, he should forward it to me and I shall arrange for it to be investigated. I would not be prepared to initiate investigations in the absence of some evidence.

Raoul Wallenberg

Mr. Burt asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek to obtain from the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics a copy of the report of the death of Raoul Wallenberg; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: The official Soviet version of the events surrounding the reported death of Mr. Wallenberg is contained in a note handed by the then Deputy Minister Gromyko to the Swedish ambassador in Moscow in 1957. This stated that Mr. Wallenberg had died of a heart attack in Lubianka prison in 1947; that all documents relating to the case had disappeared except for a handwritten report by the head of the prison medical service; and that a Minister for State Security, executed in the mid-1950s, had previously misled the Soviet Foreign Ministry about Mr. Wallenberg's presence in the Soviet Union and his alleged death. All subsequent inquiries have been answered by reference to this note.

EC Expenditure

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the own resources decision made at Fontainebleau makes provision for possible intergovernmental agreements to provide additional sums in the event of the expenditure of the European Economic Community exceeding the new proposed limits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: The new own resources decision, like the existing own resources decision, makes no provision for additional sums to be made available in the event of the VAT ceiling being reached but neither does it exclude them. Sums provided under intergovernmental agreements are not own resources.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Foreign Affairs Council of 18 and 19 June.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I represented the United Kingdom at the Foreign Affairs Council which met in Luxembourg on 18 June, and our permanent representative to the European Communities, Sir Michael Butler, did so when the Council continued on 19 June.

The Council adopted a declaration recalling that GATT proceedings against Japan had been suspended while bilateral discussions continued and expressing its concern over the lack of progress made by Japan in opening up its market. It contrasted Japan's shared responsibility to preserve and strengthen the open multilateral trading system, from which Japan benefits so much, with her relatively low propensity to import manufactures. The declaration, which will form the background to Prime Minister's Nakasone's visit to Brussels on 19 July, noted that the three-year action programme being prepared by the Japanese Government will be credible only if it embraces a clearly verifiable commitment to a significant and sustained increase in imports of manufactures and processed agricultural products into Japan and similar importance is attached to the liberalisation of financial markets and the internationalisation of the yen.

The Council adopted a declaration on a dispute in the GATT between the Community and the United States on the Community's import regime for citrus products, expressing the Community's hope that all trade issues which divide the Community and the United States might be resolved amicably, but warning that, if the United States takes unilateral action on this question, the Community would be obliged to take counter-action.

The Commission reported to the Council on the demarche by the Polish Government, currently in the chair of the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (COMECON), on closer links with the Community, which is to be considered further by member states.

There was a brief discussion on integrated Mediterranean programmes. The Council will meet on 25 June to discuss the Commission's latest draft regulation in greater detail.

The Council agreed a negotiating mandate for the second EC-Yugoslavia financial protocol, and an EC-Yugoslavia co-operation council was held. There was also discussion about the terms of a new financing regulation for Mediterranean financial protocols.

Ministers also discussed informally on 18 June preparations for the meeting of the European Council at Milan on 28-29 June. There was broad agreement with our view that the European Council must aim to take the key decisions which would contribute, in real and practical ways, to the development of the Community.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

European Community (Cane Sugar)

1. Mr. Malins asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had about the impact of Portugal's membership of the European Community on future supplies of African, Caribbean and Pacific ocean countries raw cane sugar into the European Economic Community.

Mr. MacGregor: My right hon. Friend and I are in regular contact with the sugar industry on current issues, including the possible impact of Portugal's membership of the European Community and future supplies of ACP raw cane sugar.

Animal Welfare

12. Mr. Greg Knight asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to be able to announce what action Her Majesty's Government propose to take on the recommendations made by the Farm Animal Welfare Council.

Mrs. Fenner: I understand that my hon. Friend is referring to the Council's report on red meat animals at the time of slaughter. The report raises a number of important issues to which we plan to issue our response within the next two months.

Herons and Cormorants

13. Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all those organisations that have received licences to kill (a) herons and (b) cormorants in 1985.

Mrs. Fenner: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave him on 25 and 30 April. No licences to kill either cormorants or herons have been issued by my Department in 1985. Of the licences to kill cormorants issued in 1984, one issued to a "put and take" fishery remains valid until October 1985.

Fishing Industry

14. Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has for underwriting and subsidising loans for the purchase or modernisation of fishing vessels.

Mr. MacGregor: The Government already provide funds to enable the Sea Fish Industry Authority to make loans for the construction or modernisation of fishing vessels at commercial rates.

16. Mr. Beith asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he is satisfied with the operation of the decommissioning scheme so far as it affects the inshore fishing industry.

Mr. MacGregor: I am satisfied that the decommissioning scheme has offered and is offering valuable assistance to owners of inshore fishing vessels who wish to withdraw them from fishing.

Cereal and Oilseed Rape Prices

15. Mr. Freud asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to reach agreement on cereal and oilseed rape prices with his European Economic Community colleagues.

Mr. Jopling: I refer the hon. Member to the statement I made to the House on 13 June.

Export Payments (Refunds)

17. Mr. Amess asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is satisfied with the amount of time it takes for the Intervention Board for Agricultural Payments to refund export payments under the common agricultural policy.

Mr. MacGregor: The board normally pays export refunds within four weeks, a similar time scale to general commercial practice. Regrettably there have been delays recently in the beef sector but these are being overcome.

Minced Meat

18. Sir Peter Mills asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food why pure minced meat cannot be exported but ordinary meat can.

Mrs. Fenner: The Government do not restrict the export of minced meat. But many countries have strict controls on import of uncooked mince on animal and public health grounds.

Sir Peter Mills asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will seek to persuade the Council of Ministers to allow third country export subsidies on pure beef mince.

Mr. MacGregor: Decisions on eligibility for export restitutions are a matter for the European Commission. The Commission consider that export restitutions on beef mince would be inappropriate because of the practical difficulties of controlling the nature and content of the product.

Grain Surplus

19. Sir William van Straubenzee asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has recently had with his fellow EEC Ministers of Agriculture as to the surplus of grain in the EEC.

Mr. MacGregor: I and my fellow Agriculture Ministers have met several times over the past few months in an attempt to settle the support price for cereals in 1985-86, most recently on 11 and 12 June.

Dairy Herd

20. Mr. Hardy asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the size of the national dairy herd at the present time; by what proportion this has reduced in the last four years; and how this contraction in the United Kingdom compares with that in other member states of the Community.

Mr. MacGregor: The most recent estimates available indicate that in December 1984 there were 3,311,000 dairy cows in the national dairy herd. This represents an increase of about 1 per cent. on December 1980. For the Community as a whole the dairy herd has declined by 0·5 per cent. over the same period.

Cereals

21. Mr. Latham asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the latest position over the Common Market price negotiations on cereals.

Mr. Jopling: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Cambridgeshire, North-East (Mr. Freud).

26. Mr. Home Robertson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage reduction in cereal prices he estimates would be necessary to bring supply into line with demand, allowing for reasonable provision for contingencies and seasonal factors.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 17 December 1984.

28. Dr. Twinn asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from the food industry about the likely future character of cereals required to meet consumer demand for particular types of bread and other flour products; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: None. It is important that United Kingdom millers have access to sufficient supplies of home-grown wheats that have the right properties to enable them to further reduce their requirement for imported wheat, and I would urge all sections of the United Kingdom cereals industry to continue paying attention to the importance of gearing production and marketing to the needs of the market. Improvement in milling technology and incorporation of wheat gluten has enabled our millers to increase their use of home-grown wheat in the gist from 55 per cent. in 1979 to 82 per cent. this year.

31. Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to seek to introduce a quota system for cereals grown in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: No. The common agricultural policy as it affects cereals is a matter for the Community as a whole. Throughout the recent price-fixing negotiations I urged on my fellow Agriculture Ministers the need for a long-term policy of price restraint.

33. Mr. Yeo asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest forecast of cereal output in the United Kingdom in the current year.

Mr. MacGregor: It is not possible to produce a reasonably accurate forecast of United Kingdom cereal output this year until harvest time.

Mr. Deakins asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the anticipated expenditure on cereals in the European Economic Community for 1985; and what saving would have resulted from the Commission's proposal for a 1·8 per cent. reduction in cereal prices.

Mr. MacGregor: The 1985 Budget provides 2,325 mecu for expenditure on cereals. It was drawn up on the basis of the Commission's original price proposals which included a 3·6 per cent. cut, so a move to a cut of 1·8 per cent. would have represented an increase in expenditure compared with this provision. The package containing the proposal for a 1·8 per cent. reduction also, however, included a change in the proposed level of carry over payments which would have more than offset the effect of the price change, leaving a net saving compared with the budget provision of 83 mecu.

Intensive Farming

22. Mr. Alton asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what studies he has made of the environmental and economic consequences of intensive farming.

Mrs. Fenner: A large proportion of individual studies within my Department's programme for research and development provide information relevant to a wide range of farm types and farming systems. Information on all these R and D studies is available in my Department's annual report on research and development which is available in the Library of the House.

National Farmers Union

23. Mr. Colvin asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any plans to meet the National Farmers Union.

Mr. Jopling: I am in regular contact with representatives of the National Farmers Union.

Urban Farms

24. Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps to foster the development of urban farms.

Mrs. Fenner: Commercial agricultural enterprises which meet the conditions of eligibility set out in relevant schemes established under EC and national legislation can apply for a range of grants. The Agricultural Development and Advisory Service also provides technical advice and instruction on agricultural and related matters to the agricultural, horticultural and associated industries.

Milk Quotas

25. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the implementation and the future of the present milk quotas.

Mr. Jopling: I am pleased to say that virtually all producers in Great Britain have now been notified of their quotas for 1985-86. This includes restoration of 1983 levels for about 40 per cent. of all dairy farmers. Producers are therefore in a position to plan for the futue.

I very much hope that most of the difficulties inevitably associated with setting up the quota system are now behind us and producers can look forward to a more settled period ahead. There are no plans for continuation of the quota system after the five years originaly proposed for it.

Outgoers Scheme

27. Mr. Knox asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on progress made on the outgoers scheme for dairy farmers.

Mr. Jopling: By 14 June, 1,590 producers had decided to go out of milk production under the scheme and undertaken to surrender 265 million litres of quota.

This is short of the overall target of 289 million litres we hope to purchase in England and Wales. We have therefore decided, as my hon. Friend announced on 10 June, to reopen the scheme to enable our target to be reached.

Policies and Priorities

29. Mr. Nelson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make a statement on the Government's revised policies and priorities for agriculture.

Mr. Jopling: I am still considering whether it would be appropriate to make a formal Government statement.

Soft Fruit

30. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what regulations exist to prevent dumping of soft fruit on the British market.

Mrs. Fenner: The European Community's general anti-dumping provisions, which are set out in regulation 2176/84, apply to soft fruit and soft fruit products. Further European Community regulations provide for frontier measures to be applied in the event of serious disturbance of markets in soft fruit and certain soft fruit products. The products concerned, which can be imported only under licence, are frozen and pulped strawberries and raspberries, and preparations of raspberries. In addition to these regulations, the Government have pressed the European Commission to introduce measures to prevent imports of low priced semi-processed soft fruit from eastern Europe. As a result, the 1984-85 agreement between the European Commission and the Polish authorities that Polish exporters would maintain prices of frozen and pulped strawberries and frozen blackcurrants at those ruling in intra-Community trade has been renewed for a further year. For frozen and pulped raspberries, a new agreement has been concluded for 1985-86 which also covers trade with Yugoslavia and under which the exporters have undertaken to increase free-at-frontier prices for pulp to 569 ecu (£352) per tonne and for frozen raspberries to 829 ecu (£513) per tonne in the case of Poland, and 1,290 ecu (£798) in the case of Yugoslavia.

Surplus Cereals and Beef

32. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current total of surplus cereals and beef in EEC public and private intervention; and what estimate he has made of the increase in such stocks by the end of 1985.

Mr. MacGregor: Regarding storage figures of cereals and beef held in public intervention and private storage in the European Community I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle (Mr. Leigh) on 14 January at column 30. The note referred to in that reply was updated on 18 June. It is not possible to forecast the level of stocks at the end of 1985 which will depend on a number of factors including the size of the cereals harvest and market developments.

Freezer Trawlers

34. Mr. Wallace asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received on the grants of pressure stock licences for freezer trawlers.

Mr. MacGregor: I would refer the hon. Member to the written reply which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Ryedale (Mr. Spence) on 17 June. The Fisheries Ministers' decisions took account of the representations received from the hon. Member and others.

Agricultural Products (USA Subsidies)

35. Mr. Jackson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the implications for the United Kingdom of recent moves by the United States Government to subsidise the export of certain agricultural products.

Mrs. Fenner: It is too early to quantify the effects of the export enhancement programme announced by the United States authorities on 15 May, which will depend, inter alia, on the nature and extent of such sales and the reaction of other exporting countries.

Research and Development and Advisory Services

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the amount spent in each of the last five years on research and development and advisory services in agriculture in England and Wales.

Mr. Jopling: Information about Government expenditure on research in agriculture is given in the Ministry's Annual Reports on Research and Development. The amounts spent in England and Wales are estimated to be:

	£ million
1980-81	94·7
1981-82	111·5
1982-83	124·2
1983-84	128·1
1984-85	*128·8

* Provisional.

The cost of the advisory functions of the Ministry's Agricultural Development and Advisory Service is estimated at:

1980-81	29·5
1981-82	33·2
1982-83	34·9
1983-84	37·3

* Provisional.

Mr. Strang asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received about the proposed cuts in agricultural research and advisory services.

Mr. Jopling: I have received a number of representations expressing concern about the possible impact of the revised provisions for expenditure on research and development and the advisory services.

Sheep Scab

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of sheep scab were reported in England during the last 12 months; what were the corresponding figures for the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: Over the past 10 seasonal years (July-June) the number of sheep scab outbreaks in England has been as follows:

	Numbers
1974-75	15
1975-76	142
1976-77	70
1977-78	51
1978-79	56
1979-80	23
1980-81	58
1981-82	46
1982-83	111

So far this seasonal year there have been a total of 29 confirmed cases.

With the full support of the industry and local authorities, the campaign to control and eradicate sheep scab was stepped up last year, with two compulsory national dipping periods. The overall result has been a significant fall in the number of confirmed cases. However, this co-operative effort must continue if eradication is to be achieved. It has been agreed that there will again be two compulsory national dipping periods this year designed to reduce further the level of disease.

Pigmeat

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much subsidy per lb. pig meat is paid from European Economic Community funds to Danish pig producers for exporting pigmeat to the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: Currently the United Kingdom monetary compensatory amount is positive and that for Denmark is zero; so at present a net levy is charged on all Danish pigmeat coming into the United Kingdom. The current value of the net levy is about 0·6p/lb on bacon sides.

Agricultural Policy

Sir David Price asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects the Council of Ministers to produce a longer-term policy for European agriculture than the annual price reviews; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The European Commission intends to publish a consultation paper in the next few weeks reviewing the operation of the Common Agricultural Policy. Following discussions with the interested parties it expects to submit its conclusions to the Council of Ministers in the autumn with the intention that these should be taken into account at the 1986 price fixing.

Diseases of Fish Act 1983

Mr. Corrie asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the Diseases of Fish Act 1983 will be implemented; and in particular when the clauses relating to the registering of fish farms in the Diseases of Fish Act 1983 will be implemented.

Mr. MacGregor: The Diseases of Fish Act 1983 was brought into operation on 1 April 1984. It provides powers for a scheme to register fish farms to be introduced by order and I and my right hon. Friends hope to be able to introduce a registration scheme later this year.

Food Labelling

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning the extent to which his current proposals for nutritional food labelling will enable individuals to make a judgment as to the health implications of specific foods.

Mrs. Fenner: We have received a large number of comments on our draft guidelines on nutrition labelling of foods. My officials are now assessing these comments and will be considering how far amendments need to be made to the draft both to encourage the widest use of nutritional labelling by food manufacturers, and to maximise its usefulness and comprehensibility for consumers.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Marlow asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will compare the budgeted expenditure for the common agricultural policy for the current year as set out by the financial mechanism with the actual common agricultural policy expenditure for each of the previous four calendar years, using the current year's budget as 100, comparisons being made on the basis of European currency units.

Mr. Jopling: The financial guideline does not apply to the 1985 budget. The expenditure outturn under the common agricultural policy for the years 1981 to 1984, taking the provision in the 1985 budget as 100 was as follows:

	Expenditure Outturn
1982	63·0
1983	80·2

European Community (Expenditure)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the percentage of total European Economic Community spending which was devoted to agriculture; what was the percentage of total European Economic Community spending devoted to the storage or disposal of food surpluses, respectively, in each of the years from 1973 to 1984, respectively; and what estimate he has made of the comparable percentage figures in 1985.

Mr. Jopling: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Pesticides

Mr. Nellist asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what products, currently on sale in Britain, contain the chemicals 2,4,5-T or 2,4-D;

(2) which manufacturers currently produce products containing the chemical 2,4-D.

Mrs. Fenner: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Food Storage

Mr. Canavan asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current amount, value, and cost of storage of surplus food in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the European Economic Community.

Mr. MacGregor: On 31 May intervention stocks of beef, breadwheat, butter and skimmed milk powder in the United Kingdom were 332,000 tonnes valued at about £500 million using the buying-in prices valid at that date. The cost of storing and handling United Kingdom intervention stocks, including all forms of cereals, in 1984 was some £46 million. The volume of Community stocks of these products at the latest available dates was 6,905,000 tonnes, but these are only valued once a year, on 30 November. Storage and handling costs for other member states' intervention stocks are not available.

Energy Costs

Mr. Hunter asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will increase support for horticultural energy costs.

Mr. Jopling: Grants on investment in energy saving measures in the glasshouse sector are already at substantially higher rates than most other agricultural capital grants.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Rent Payments

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland in respect of how many houses in Northern Ireland rent is paid from Department of Health and Social Services funds to the Northern Ireland Housing Executive.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Department of Health and Social Services funds the health and Social Services Boards which pay rent to the Northern Ireland Housing Executive for houses used for Board purposes. Informaion about the number of these houses is not immediately available. I will write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how frequently reviews are carried out to establish the occupanccy of houses for which rent is being paid by the Department of Health and Social Services to the Northern Ireland Housing Executive.

Mr. Chris Patten: Health and Social Services Boards are required by the Department of Health and Social Services to keep all properties including those for which rent is paid to the Northern Ireland Housing Executive under continual review.

Unoccupied Houses

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many unoccupied houses for which rent is paid by the Department of Health and Social Services to the Northern Ireland Housing Executive have been repossessed in each of the last three years.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information is not readily available. I shall write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Pupil Numbers (Strangford)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many pupils there are at each primary school in the constituency of Strangford; and what were the equivalent figures five years ago.

Mr. Scott: The information is as follows:

Schools	January 1979 Enrolment	January 1984 Enrolment

Summer Activity Schemes

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are his present proposals for the summer activity schemes for the mentally handicaped within the district of Ards borough.

Mr. Chris Patten: The provision of services is a matter for the Eastern health and social services board who plan to run a scheme on alternate days for a three-week period at Clifton special care school, Bangor. The scheme will serve children from the district of Ards borough.

Industrial Civil Servants

Mr. McCusker asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many industrial civil servants are employed by the Northern Ireland Civil Service.

Dr. Boyson: On 1 June 1985, the latest date for which figures are available, 6,036 industrial civil servants were employed by the Northern Ireland Civil Service.

Partition Acts

Mr. McCusker asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he anticipates introducing legislation to repeal the Partition Acts of 1868 and 1876 in relation to Northern Ireland.

Dr. Boyson: These Acts are currently under examination by the Land Law Working Group, which is preparing wide-ranging recommendations for the reform of land law in Northern Ireland. The working group is preparing its final report, and when this is received the nature of the legislation required in respect of co-ownership and other issues will be considered.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. McCusker asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will draw to the attention of the various area health and social service boards the fact that the provisions of the European Economic Community treaty regarding equal treatment for workers of the member states as regards employment do not apply to employment in the public service.

Mr. Chris Patten: The European Court of Justice established that in deciding whether the exception regarding emploment in the public service (as contained in article 48.4 of the EEC Treaty) is applicable in a particular case, not only the status of the employer but also the particular job must be considered. Health and Social Services Boards provide a very wide range of emploment and not all of the categories would fall within the definition of public service. If the hon. Gentleman has a particular category in mind perhaps he would write to me.

Civil Service

Mr. McCusker asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects to publish the most recent findings of the monitoring unit of the Northern Ireland Civil Service.

Dr. Boyson: It is expected that an initial report from the equal opportunities monitoring system, setting out the broad picture of the Northern Ireland Civil Service as at 1 January 1985, will be published by the end of this year. A more comprehensive review covering the calendar year 1985 will be published in mid-1986.

Redundant Churches

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has as to the proportion of the total number of redundant churches in Northern Ireland accounted for by the 85 churches eligible for grants as listed buildings.

Mr. Chris Patten: All of the 85 listed churches which would be eligible for grant under the proposed historic churches order are in current ecclesiastical use.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people in Northern Ireland have been unemployed for (a) one to two years, (b) two to three years, (c) three to four years, (d) four to five years, (e) five to six years, (f) six to seven years and g) over seven years.

Dr. Boyson: The table shows duration of unemployment in Northern Ireland at 9 May 1985. A breakdown of persons unemployed for more than five years is not available.

Duration	Number unemployed
One to two years	20,958
Two to three years	13,774
Three to four years	8,821
Four to five years	7,509
Over five years	10,591

Firearms

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons in Northern Ireland now hold firearms certificates; and of these how many are in respect of (a) shotguns only, (b) rifles only and (c) handguns only.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 12 June 1985, c. 479]: On 1 June 1985, 86,039 persons in Northern Ireland held firearm certificates. The remaining information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons in each year since 1 January 1969 are known to have been killed by a legally-held weapon that had been stolen from its owner; in each case what kind of weapon was used; and in each year how many persons were murdered by shooting by a terrorist organisation.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 12 June 1985, c. 480]: Whilst it is not possible to be certain of the circumstances in every case, the number of persons believed to have been shot dead by members of terrorist organisations in each year since 1 January 1969 is given in the following table. The additional information sought is not readily available from existing records and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Prisoners (Suicides)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many inmates attempted or committed suicide (a) in prison and (b) in police custody in each of the past five years and to date.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 18 June 1985, c. 100]: No person in police custody committed suicide in this period. Information on attempted suicides could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The information in respect of persons in prison custody is as follows:

	Self inflicted injuries	Suicides
1980	52	—
1981	93	—
1982	52	—
1983	80	—

* Up to 17 June.

Notes:

1. The above figures do not include the 10 inmates who died as a result of hunger strike action in 1981.
2. It is not possible to identify accurately from prison records how many self-inflicted injuries requiring medical attention were attempts at suicide.

North of Scotland Hydro-Electric Board (Borrowings)

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will permit the North of Scotland Hydro-Electric Board to borrow on the commercial market.

Mr. Younger: This is already permissible. Such borrowing would count against the board's external financing limit.

Birds of Prey (Poisoning)

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of known cases of poisoning of protected birds of prey in Caithness and Sutherland during each of the last five years; and if he will give the comparable figures for (a) all other districts of Highland region, (b) Grampian region, (c) Tayside region, (d) the Borders region and (e) Dumfries and Galloway region.

Mr. Ancram: All wild birds are protected under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 but some birds of prey are protected by special penalties. In the last five years the number of incidents where specially protected birds were killed as a result of misuse of pesticide or poisoned bait investigated by DAFS were as follows:

Region	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985
Highland	2	4	4	1	3	3
Grampian	2	1	—	—	—	—
Tayside	—	—	1	—	—	—
Borders	—	—	—	—	—	—
Dumfries & Galloway	—	1	1	—	—	—

The information is collected on a regional basis and it is not possible to break the figures down to districts.

Retirement Homes and Sheltered Housing

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any information about the average waiting time that people who have applied for admission to local retirement homes or sheltered housing presently experience, as compared with six years ago in each region of Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: Information of this kind is not held centrally.

Teachers

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Falkirk, West on 10 May, Official Report, column 518, he will state the average number of years of payment to recipients out of the Scottish teachers' superannuation scheme, taking into account the contributors to the scheme who have died within their period of service.

Mr. John MacKay: In the year to 31 March 1985, 948 pensioners within the Scottish teachers superannuation scheme died whilst in receipt of pension, and 130 contributors died within their period of service. Taking all these deaths into account, the average number of years of payment to former teachers, rounded down to the nearest whole year, was 14 years. Contributors to the scheme who die within their period of service will not, of course, normally have been in receipt of payments from the scheme, but a gratuity will be payable on death and in some cases pensions will be awarded to dependants.

Asbestos (Glenboig)

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will call in the planning approval for Shanks and McEwan which allows the dumping of asbestos at Glenboig prior to holding a public inquiry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: Modification of planning permission or of licences to dispose of waste issued under the Control of Pollution Act 1974 are matters for the planning authority and the waste disposal authority respectively. In this case, Monklands district council is both the planning authority and the waste disposal authority. Under planning legislation, the Secretary of State has no "call in" power once planning permission has been granted and there is no "call in" provision under the Control of Pollution Act 1974. Where an authority proposes to revoke or modify planning permission or a site licence, the holder has a right to have the matter brought before the Secretary of State for determination.

Dentistry

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many dentists there are in Scotland per head of population.

Mr. John MacKay: The whole-time equivalent number of dentists per head of population in Scotland as at 30 September 1984 is 1:2,607.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of adults in Scotland have had all their natural teeth removed or extracted.

Mr. John MacKay: The 1978 adult dental health survey concluded that in that year 39 per cent. of adults in Scotland had no natural teeth. This is the most recent information available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many dental students there have been in Scotland in each of the last 20 years, per head of population; and how many student grants to dental students per head of population there were for the same dates.

Mr. John MacKay: The detail requested on the numbers of dental students, other than for the academic year 1965-66, which is not available, is shown in the table. Information on the numbers of grants to dental students is not readily available and could not be provided except at disproportionate cost.

Academic Year	Number of dental students	Rate per head of population
1966-67	132	1:39,324
1967-68	137	1:37,858
1968-69	131	1:39,599
1969-70	137	1:37,918
1970-71	149	1:35,067
1971-72	150	1:34,960
1972-73	203	1:25,667
1973-74	178	1:29,279
1974-75	182	1:28,716
1975-76	184	1:28,294
1976-77	190	1:27,395
1977-78	194	1:26,781
1978-79	180	1:28,774
1979-80	187	1:27,631
1980-81	173	1:29,788
1981-82	176	1:29,258
1982-83	169	1:30,571
1983-84	181	1:28,455
1984-85	161	1:31,961

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average cost per patient of dental treatment in Edinburgh, Glasgow and Dundee dental hospitals, respectively.

Mr. John MacKay: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Forestry

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his reply of Monday 17 June, Official Report, column 30, which of the 10 instances of retrospective forestry grant awards arose from administrative error, misleading oral advice and misleading written advice, respectively.

Mr. John MacKay: The information is as follows:

Cases where there was an administrative error
- Syke farm
- Thurlow estate

Cases involving misleading written advice
- College estate
- Yonsea farm
- Annat estate
- Strathfillan estate
- Doune estate
- High kiers

Cases involving misleading oral advice
- Exton estate
- Otter estate

NATIONAL FINANCE

EC (Finance)

Mr. Marlow asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will set out the effective value added tax percentage rate paid into the European Economic Community budget net of rebates corresponding to that year for each of the last four calendar years;

(2) if he will set out an index for (a) the Community overall budget and (b) the Community agricultural budget for 1985 and each of the preceding four calendar years indexed against a 1985 index in each case of 100;

(3) if he will set out the projected net value added tax percentage contribution to the European Economic Community for 1985 and for each of the last four calendar years according to (a) the value added tax share contribution and (b) the previous formula;

(4) if he will set out the United Kingdom's financial relationship with the European Economic Community over the last four calendar years and the projected figures for 1985, indicating (a) gross contribution, (b) net contribution, and (c) Community expenditure in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what has been the total sum contributed by the United Kingdom to the European Economic Community since 1 January 1973; what has been the total amount received in grants, rebates and other payments over the same period; and how much of the total sums received were in respect of payments to facilitate the subsidised export of food to third countries;

(2) what has been the percentage increase in the spending of the European Economic Community on all its activities in each year since 1973, respectively; and what further increase is planned for 1986;

(3) what estimate he has made of the percentage increase in the overall spending of the Common Market which will take place if the value added tax element in its income is increased from 1 to 1·4 per cent.;

(4) what estimate he has made of the increase in the United Kingdom gross contribution to the European Economic Community consequent on the proposal to increase the value added tax contribution from 1 to 1·4 per cent.;

(5) what estimate he has made of the net contribution which the United Kingdom will make to the European Economic Community in 1986 in the event of the own resources of the Community being increased in accordance with the Fontainebleau agreement;

(6) if he will publish a table showing in respect of the calendar years 1985 to 1988, his estimates of the net payments by the United Kingdom to the European Economic Community, pursuant to the estimates given in the public expenditure White Paper for each of the financial years from 1985 to 1988; and if he will also publish a table showing the net contributions by the United Kingdom in each of the calendar years from 1973 to 1984, respectively.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

EC (Harmonisation)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government on the proposals of the EEC Commissioner Lord Cockfield that the Common Market should be facilitated by the harmonisation of indirect taxation and excise duties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Commission has not yet made any detailed proposals for the harmonisation of indirect taxation and excise duties. The Government generally welcome the Commission's ideas on the completion of the common market, as represented by their White Paper, although they will clearly require further study. We do not, however, believe that fiscal harmonisation is a prerequisite for the establishment of a common market in goods and services and the Commission's proposals on this aspect may well prove unrealistic.

EC (Overspending)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the payments which were agreed at the Brussels Council of Ministers on 23 and 24 April to cover the overspending of the Common Market in 1985 will be in the form of a repayable loan or advance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer my hon. Friend to paragraph 3 of the text of the 1985 intergovernmental agreement, deposited in the Library.

TRANSPORT

Vehicle Emissions and Driving Conditions

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) whether he has any intention of increasing controls over vehicle emissions of carbon monoxide, hydrocarbons, or oxides of nitrogen; and if he will make a statement about the effectiveness of present controls in reducing emissions of cars under (a) typical driving conditions and (b) the European test drive cycle;

(2) if he is satisfied that the European test drive cycle adequately represents average or typical driving conditions in the United Kingdom today.

Mrs. Chalker: Most vehicles are at present subject to type approval regulations limiting the amounts of these three pollutants to the levels permitted under EC directive 78/665/EEC. These levels are reduced by directive 83/351/EEC which we intend to apply in our regulations in due course. All measurements are made under the test cycle prescribed in the directive which is designed to stimulate typical driving conditions in congested urban areas.

The Council of Ministers has recently agreed that work should be done over the next two years to formulate additional non-urban driving sequences so as more adequately to represent modern driving conditions in Europe, and we shall be participating in this work.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport what study he has made of the effect of traffic growth, as predicted in the new national road traffic forecasts, on the level of carbon monoxide, hydrocarbons, and oxides of nitrogen emitted into the environment.

Mrs. Chalker: No detailed study has been made, but the rate of reduction of maximum levels of these three pollutants permitted from new vehicles coming into service over the next decade is expected to be faster than the forecast rate of increase of road traffic.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he is satisfied with the present controls on emission of smoke from diesel engines; and what study he has made about whether a higher standard could be (a) technically and (b) economically achieved.

Mrs. Chalker: The standard for maximum smoke from diesel engines is contained in EC directive 72/306/EEC. There is evidence from a number of sources that a stricter standard is now technically and economically achievable, and we shall be pressing for this in Community discussions on a revision to the directive.

Greece (Airport Security)

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make representations to the Greek aviation authorities in the light of recent evidence of laxity in security at Athens airport, regarding measures to improve the efficiency of personal and baggage checks for travellers using Greek airports.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am aware that the security arrangements provided by the authorities at Athens are unsatisfactory. The Government are continuing to make representations to the Greek authorities on the screening of passengers and baggage at Athens and they have taken note of our views. For the time being, British Airways will continue to carry out its own screening of passengers at the departure gate.

Road Traffic (Driving Instruction) Act 1984

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to bring into force the Road Traffic (Driving Instruction) Act 1984.

Mrs. Chalker: Most of the provisions of the Act were introduced on 20 May 1985. Section 1 of the Act relating to a requirement for driving instructors to display their official identification documents in tuition cars has yet to be implemented. Preparation of identification documents suitable for this purpose is in hand and we expect to bring this remaining provision into operation later this year.

Scheduled Air Services

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he intends to have with the Governments of the United States of America and of western European countries to provide more scheduled air services from their countries into the west and east midlands.

Mr. Michael Spicer: It is for overseas airlines to decide on commercial grounds whether they wish to serve Birmingham and east midlands airports. At present we have no plans to discuss the possibility of such services with the United States Government, though we are always prepared to consider carefully any proposal put to us. Unused rights are already available to Birmingham from seven western European countries and to east midlands from three. In our discussions with western European countries we shall be seeking agreements which further widen the choice of United Kingdom airports available to their airlines. And we shall be discussing with the airport authorities their plans for future development.

Fares

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide a table, giving at constant prices the index of fares in each of the last 10 years for (a) British Rail, (b) municipal operators, (c) passenger transport executives, (d) the National Bus Company (e) the Scottish Bus Group and (f) all bus operators on the same basis as the graphs in the White Paper on buses.

Mr. Ridley: Indices of rail and stage bus fares, in real terms, are given in the following table. Separate figures for NBC and SBG cannot readily be provided for the whole of the period.

*Trends in real bus and rail fares

Dartford Tunnel

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is taking to prevent congestion in the future at Dartford tunnel.

Mrs. Chalker: I am aware of the vital importance of the Dartford tunnel in relation to the M25 and to the local economies of Kent and Essex. For these reasons, grants of some £21 million have already been made to Kent and Essex county councils for improvements to the approach roads and toll plazas so that toll collection does not lead to queues.

For the longer term, we must ensure adequate tunnel capacity. In January this year I commissioned consultants to carry out a study of future traffic projections for the tunnel. Their report was received recently and I accept their conclusions and recommendations. In summary, the tunnel is likely to be at the limit of its capacity by the mid-1990s and an engineering study should be carried out to determine the best method of providing additional crossing capacity at Dartford.

After consultation with Kent and Essex county councils, who have joint responsibility for the existing tunnel, I have decided to commission an engineering study, to report as soon as practicable. Any commitment to construction of additional crossing capacity will depend on a sound economic case based on sustained future traffic growth.

I am placing a copy of the traffic study in the Library.

Road Programme

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has completed his review of the road programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I have placed in the Library of the House copies of a report published today which records the outcome of this year's review of the road programme. Copies are also available in the Vote Office. Fifty-one schemes are added to the national programme, worth £311 million in all. The road programme now contains 343 schemes in construction or in preparation with a total value of over £4 billion. The report also sets out in detail the progress made in each of the Department's regions since 1983 and proposals for further study of investment needs.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL FOR SCOTLAND

Protected Birds of Prey (Poisoning)

Mr. Maclennan asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland what was the total number of prosecutions for the poisoning of birds of prey in Caithness and Sutherland in each of the last five years; and if he will give the comparable figures for (a) all other districts of Highland region, (b) Grampian region, (c) Tayside region, (d) the Borders region and (e) Dumfries and Galloway region.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: This information is not available.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Youth Custody Centre, Wetherby

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes he is making at the Wetherby youth custody centre; over what period; and with what transitional arrangements.

Mr. Mellor: As my noble Friend has made clear in a letter to my hon. Friend, we have decided that Wetherby should function as a closed youth custody centre when the new open youth custody centre at Thorn Cross is commissioned shortly. A perimeter fence is currently under construction at Wetherby. Redevelopment is planned to begin about the middle of 1987 and will take some years. Wetherby will now remain in continuous use, but during the priod of redevelopment its population will be reduced to approximately 120.

Prisoners (Early Release)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of prisoners who had received sentences ranging from 20 to 25 years, 10 to 15 years, five to 10 years and two and a half to five years were granted early releases in each single year since 1979; and what effect this has had on the total prison population.

Mr. Mellor: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Drug Addicts

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the number of drug addicts in the west midlands county notified to his Department in each single year since 1979;

(2) how many drug addicts were notified to his Department in each single year since 1979.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested for the years 1979 to 1983 is given in tables 3.11 to 3.13 of "Statistics of the Misuse of Drugs, United Kingdom, Supplementary Tables, 1983." The only statistics at present available for 1984 are given in the reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Mr. Wheeler) on 11 June at columns 394-95.

Drugs Offences

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of convictions for being in possession of drugs in each year since 1979.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested for the years 1979 to 1983 is given in table 7 of "Stastistics of the Misuse of Drugs in the United Kingdom, 1983" (Home Office Statistical Bulletin 18/84). Corresponding figures for 1984 are not yet available.

TRANSPORT

Leadenham (Roadworks)

Mr. Douglas Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many civil servants engaged in work relevant to the construction of a bypass or relief road for Leadenham have fallen sick through overwork during the last 12 months.

Mrs. Chalker: None has fallen sick. All staff are working at fullest capacity on Leadenham and other important trunk road work in Lincolnshire.

London Taxi Fares

Mr. Bendall asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will now announce an increase in London taxi fares; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: I have made an order increasing London taxi fares wih effect from Sunday 14 July. The overall effect will be to increase fares by about 8·2 per cent. on average.

The new tariff will incorporate a minimum 80p—including an unchanged hiring charge of 40p—for the first 1,068 yards or three minutes and 36 seconds. The rate will then be 20p for every 534 yards or one minute and 48 seconds up to six miles and 20p for each 356 yards or one minute and 12 seconds thereafter. All extra charges remain unchanged.

Roads (Safety Barriers)

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many applications by local authorities for the installation of safety barriers on trunk roads have been refused in each of the last five years for which figures are available;

(2) what criteria must be satisfied before safety barriers are installed on trunk roads in England;

(3) what are the current specifications for safety barriers on motorways and on trunk roads;

(4) what data are available to his Department on the performance of road safety barriers;

(5) what is his estimate of the natural life of safety barriers on motorways.

Mrs. Chalker [pursuant to her reply, 11 February 1985, c. 25]: I regret that my reply of 11 February in relation to part 4 of the question was incorrect when it stated that there are two or three cases per year of vehicles penetrating safety fences, causing casualties. I called for further investigations, which have revealed that there has been an average of 27 such cases per year on motorways, over the past three years. Information relating to all-purpose dual carriageway is not available.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Company Reports and Accounts (Defaults)

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the latest figures available showing the number of companies in default of accounts obligations and annual report obligations, respectively, for Great Britian as a whole and for Scotland.

Mr. Fletcher: As at 18 June 1985, 288,579 companies registered in Great Britian were in default of their obligations to deliver accounts to the appropriate registrar, and 263,291 in default of their annual return obligations. These figures include, respectively, 15,939 and 18,175 companies registered in Scotland. They exclude companies in liquidation or in the course of dissolution.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Reye's Syndrome

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the incidence of Reye's syndrome per head of population in Northern Ireland; and how this compares with the rest of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Chris Patten: In the year 1 August 1983 to 31 July 1984, 17 cases of Reye's syndrome on Northern Ireland were reported to the communicable disease surveillance centre under its voluntary reporting scheme. The estimated incidence based on these figures is four per 100,000 in children under 16 years; in England and Wales the estimated incidence is 0·5 per 100,000 children.

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has as to the causes associated with the occurrence of Reye's syndrome in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Chris Patten: The aetiology of Reye's syndrome is unknown, but it is thought to represent an abnormal reaction to a viral infection in a genetically susceptible host, possibly modified by exogenous toxins. Northern Ireland is participating in the Reye's syndrome surveillance scheme for the British Isles which is organised by the communicable disease surveillance centre in collaboration with the British Paediatric Association. The aims of the scheme and studies linked to it are to identify the factors associated with the condition.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many persons both male and female were placed in employment by the Burnley and Padiham jobcentres for the last month for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Burnley and Padiham jobcentres placed respectively 497 and 130 people in the five-week period ending 3 May 1985. It is estimated that about a quarter of all engagements are made through jobcentres.

Non-statutory Training Organisations

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will conduct a review of the working of the non-statutory training organisations with reference particularly to provision for training in the new technology industries and to the training provision of companies not involved in the non-statutory training organisations.

Mr. Peter Morrison: No. The Manpower Services Commission received reports from its own officials and the CBI in May this year which indicated that the arrangements for non-statutory training organisations are generally working satisfactorily and confirming that new technology training is a feature in many of their activities. The commission provides a range of grants and services designed to promote training which are available to all employers.

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest figures for the destinations of people completing the youth training scheme.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Manpower Services Commission conducts a regular survey of youth training scheme leavers. Questionnaires are sent to 15 per cent. of leavers some three months after they leave the scheme. The latest information, which is available in the Library, covers young people who left the scheme in October 1984. This shows that 49 per cent. were in work, 9 per cent. were on another youth training scheme, 1 per cent. were on a full-time course at a college or training centre, 1 per cent. were back at school, 38 per cent. were unemployed and 2 per cent. were doing something else.

The decrease in the proportion in work compared to results of surveys for previous months reflects partly the seasonal reduction in the recruitment activity of employers and partly the considerably lower number of those who left the youth training scheme in October 1984, many of them before they had completed a full period of training.

A much more comprehensive picture is provided by the survey of those leaving the scheme between July and September 1984, which shows that some 60 per cent. went into employment and about two thirds went into work or full-time education or training.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the total sums which have been devoted to running the youth training scheme in the west midlands region in each single year since its initiation and the number of participants during the same period.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The information requested is as follows. The west midlands region is taken to cover the areas of Birmingham, Coventry/Warwick, Dudley/Sandwell, Staffordshire, Telford and Wolverhampton/Walsall.

	Expenditure £	Participants £
1983-84	43,140,841	45,483
1984-85	85,960,480	51,762

Current plans are for an expenditure of about £88 million and 51,000 entrants in 1985-86.

PRIME MINISTER

Baby Seal Products

Mr. Latham asked the Prime Minister whether, in the next meeting of the European Council of Ministers, the representative of Her Majesty's Government will vote for an indefinite ban on the import of baby seal products into all European Community countries.

The Prime Minister: Both species of seal covered by the existing directive, the Harp seal and the Hooded seal, remain vulnerable to exploitation. We consider that an extension of the ban is justified on conservation grounds and we shall make our position clear at the meeting of the Council of Environment Ministers on 28 June.

Widdicombe Inquiry

Mr. Straw asked the Prime Minister which Government Departments have submitted evidence to the Widdicombe inquiry into local government practices and procedures; what was the nature of the evidence; and if she will place a copy of the evidence in the Library.

The Prime Minister: Two submissions have been made by Government Departments to the Widdicombe inquiry in relation to local government advertising: a report by the Department of the Environment, the Scottish Office and the Welsh Office on publicity and political campaigning by local authorities; and a note on central Government publicity and advertising submitted by the Cabinet Office at the request of the committee of inquiry. Supplementary oral evidence has also been given. Copies of both submissions are in the Library. Evidence on the full range of the inquiry is still being submitted.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Construction Industry (Taxation)

Mr. Eggar asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated loss of value added tax and income tax and so on from tax avoidance or evasion by traders in the construction industry who are failing to register for value added tax; and if he is satisfied with the present arrangements for enforcing the relevant legislation.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that it is not possible to provide a meaningful estimate. The present VAT enforcement arrangements, while protecting established businesses from undue interference in their activities, do not necessarily ensure that new and growing businesses make timely notification of their liability to be registered. This should be improved with the new civil penalties proposed in clause 14 of the Finance Bill.

To combat evasion of direct taxes, the Inland Revenue has been allocated additional staff. On present plans, the number of staff deployed to combat the black economy will have been increased by 1,700 over the period 1979 to 1988.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Colvin asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what revenue has been received from value added tax on house repair bills in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Hayhoe: Businesses registered for value added tax are not required to make returns of the tax charged on particular supplies of goods and services, and information of this kind is therefore not directly available. However, estimates of consumers' expenditure suggest that the yield from value added tax on housing repairs in 1984 was of the order of £500 million.

EC (Budgetary Control)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he is satisfied with the progress to date in achieving strict budgetary control of spending by the European Economic Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply he received from my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 18 June, at column 90.

"Official Report"

Mr. Thurnham asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer why the Official Report published on 7 June did not show details of the wages council debate after 9 pm on the previous evening.

Mr. Hayhoe: Certain staff slowed production as a result of an industrial dispute. This made it impracticable to include any of the debate after 9.5 pm without breaching the overriding requirement for publication overnight.

Drug Detection Staff

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Customs and Excise officers were employed, in each year since 1979, solely for the purpose of drug detection tasks.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

European Monetary System

Mr. Leigh asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what amendments have been proposed to the agreement of March 1979 between the central banks of the European Community which laid down the operating procedures for the European monetary system (EMS).

Mr. Ian Stewart: On 10 June, EC central bank governors took formal steps to implement the measures to improve the usability of the official ecu agreed in principle last March. The central bank agreement of 13 March 1979, which lays down the operating procedures for the EMS, has been amended and consequential changes have been made to the rules governing the operations of the European monetary co-operation fund (EMCF).

Under the March 1979 agreement, member states participating in the EMS agreed to swap 20 per cent. of their gold and dollar reserves in return for ecus. These swaps are renewed quarterly. The ecus so created can be used by member states participating in the exchange rate mechanism (ERM) to meet liabilities arising out of compulsory intervention.

The changes to be made in these arrangements are as follows. First, member states which have accepted ecus in settlement of liabilities will receive, and those which have used ecus to meet liabilities will pay, a rate of interest which will be more closely aligned to market rates. At present the interest rate on net ecu positions is calculated as a weighted average of member states' official discount rates.

Second, the maximum proportion of ecus which a member state participating in the ERM can be obliged to take in settlement of debts arising out of intervention at the margins of the ERM band is to be increased. At present ecus can only be used as of right for 50 per cent. of any settlement, but this ratio will go up to 100 per cent. to the extent that the recipient of the ecus is itself a net ecu debtor. This does not affect the United Kingdom as we do not participate in the ERM.

Third, since the ecu cannot be used directly in interventions, a mobilisation scheme will be introduced to enable those participating in EMS (including the United Kingdom) to swap part of their ecu holdings for spot dollars for a maximum period of six months in case of need. To meet requests for such swaps, EMS central banks are committed to provide dollars up to an agreed ceiling, but member states may decline to participate in a specific mobilisation operation in exceptional circumstances, such as balance of payments difficulties or the inadequacy of their reserves.

In addition to these changes, there is agreement in principle that non-EC central banks and the Bank for International Settlements should be enabled to hold ecu accounts with the European monetary co-operation fund. The central bank governors have made the necessary changes to the central bank agreement and the EMCF rules but these cannot take effect until Council regulation EC 3181/78 has been amended. The Commission has presented a draft regulation to implement this change.

EC (Finance)

Mr. Marlow asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out the United Kingdom's financial relationship with the European Economic Community over the last four calendar years and the projected figures for 1985, indicating (a) gross contribution, (b) net contribution, and (c) Community expenditure in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 20 June 1985]: Estimates of the United Kingdom's future contributions and receipts are not produced on the basis of calendar years as these are not accounting periods for the purpose of United Kingdom public expenditure. The Government's latest estimate for the 1985-86 financial year was published in the public expenditure White Paper (Cmnd. 9428). An updated estimate taking account of all relevant factors will, as is usual, be published in the autumn statement.

Information concerning the outturn for past calendar years is, however, available, and the information requested is set out in the table:

£ million

	Gross Contribution	Net Contribution	Community Expenditure in the UK*
1981	2,174	397	1,777
1982	2,863	606	2,257
1983	2,976	647	2,329
1984	3,259	689	2,570

* Figures given for Community expenditure in the United Kingdom include both receipts and refunds.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the percentage increase in the spending of the European Economic Community on all its activities in each year since 1973, respectively; and what further increase is planned for 1986.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 20 June 1985]: The year on year percentage increases in the spending of the EC since 1973 are as follows:

	Percentage
1973	—
1974	5
1975	11
1976	45
1977	13
1978	29
1979	10

1981	18
1982	19
1983	14
1984	9
1985	4

* Figures are not yet availble.

SCOTLAND

Football Grounds (Rates)

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received regarding the rating of Scottish football grounds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: I have received letters recently from the Scottish Football Association and a number of hon. Members about the rates burden on clubs. I shall send the hon. Member a copy of my reply to the association.

Salmon

Mr. Onslow asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he is taking to identify the Scottish rivers where the escapement of spawning salmon is insufficient to maintain wild stocks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: The scientists at the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland freshwater fisheries laboratory, Pitlochry, are engaged in a survey of the distribution and abundance of juvenile salmon on the major rivers throughout Scotland. It is too early to predict the results of that survey.

On those rivers on which they have been involved in population studies over a period of years, there is no evidence of inadequate spawning escapement.

Mr. Onslow asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest estimate of the annual value to the Scottish economy of recreational salmon fisheries in Scottish rivers; and how this compares with the situation in 1975.

Mr. John MacKay: The most recent study on behalf of the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland was carried out by the tourism and recreation research unit of Edinburgh university and was completed in 1984. The researchers suggested that expenditure by salmon anglers in Scotland was in the range £22 million to £46 million per annum. There is no basis for comparison with previous years.

Mr. Onslow asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what action his Department has taken to prevent illegal fishing for salmon in Scottish waters; and what is his estimate of the result.

Mr. John MacKay: A great deal of effort is devoted to the enforcement of salmon and sea fisheries legislation by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland both directly and in co-operation with district salmon fishery boards, water bailiffs and the police. Fishery protection vessels, fixed-wing aircraft, helicopters and shore-based staff equipped with two-way radio telephones are all deployed, with considerable success, to curb the activities of those who fish illegally in Scottish inshore waters. In the period 1 January 1984 to 31 December 1984, operations against illegal fishing for salmon resulted in 31 cases being dealt with by the courts.

Fishing for salmon by drift nets set from a boat is prohibited in Scottish waters. My right hon. Friend is considering whether to extend that ban to the use of gill nets set other than from a boat, and to ban the carriage of monofilament gill nets, under powers in the Inshore Fishing (Scotland) Act 1984.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Overseas Students

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much aid is provided to overseas students on the Foreign Office vote in the current year; and from which countries the students come.

Mr. Renton: In the financial year 1984-85, £70.54 million was provided to overseas students on the Foreign and Commonwealth Office Vote. This money is supporting students from the following countries:

Afghanistan

Falkland Islands

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how soon he expects to reach a decision on whether to establish a 200-mile exclusive fishing zone around the Falkland Islands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Hastings and Rye (Mr. Warren) on 20 June at column 203.

Mr. Ahmed Walid Rajab

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response he has received from the Syrian ambassador to his request on 12 June that Mr. Ahmed Walid Rajab should be transferred from the United Kingdom; and by what specific date he has required the departure of this diplomat.

Mr. Renton: We are in touch with the Syrian authorities about this matter. I have nothing further to add at this stage.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Teachers

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the number of teachers who have taken early retirement who are now re-employed in full-time, part-time or temporary teaching posts.

Mr. Dunn: The Department does not maintain a record of the numbers of prematurely retired teachers whom authorities subsequently re-employ, but the evidence suggests that the proportion who are re-employed is very small. A special exercise showed that, of over 20,000 school teachers who had been released from service under the premature retirement scheme by 31 March 1983, 126 were re-employed on a part-time basis, and 12 on a full-time basis, on that date in which the authority had released them.

University Staff

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report the number of university staff for each year since 1978-79 broken down into categories of academic, academic related and non-academic staff.

Mr. Brooke: Information on non-academic staff is not readily available. The remaining information is as follows:

University staff: Great Britain

	Full-time		Part-time
	Academic	Academic related	Academic	Academic related
1978-79	40,814	N/A	1,422	N/A
1979-80	42,300	N/A	1,489	N/A
1980-81	43,017	9,389	1,577	343
1981-82	42,840	9,439	1,644	361
1982-83	41,994	9,087	2,266	464
1983-84	42,058	9,150	2,739	562

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the amount of Government expenditure on the assisted places scheme for each year since its introduction; how many children were on the scheme; and what proportion of the maintained school population this represents.

Mr. Dunn: The information requested is as follows:

	Expenditure £ million (financial year)	Number of assisted pupils (school year)	APS pupils as percentage of maintained school population (as at January)
1981-82	3·022	4,185	0·05
1982-83	8·690	8,616	0·12
1983-84	14·995	13,102	0·18
1984-85	22·152	17,336	*0·25

* Estimated.

Students (Statistics)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of students in (a) universities and (b) public sector advanced education are from social groups IV and V; and what are the comparable figures for each year since the introduction of mandatory awards.

Mr. Brooke: The proportions of home university students accepted through the Universities Central Council on Admissions (UCCA) from social groups IV ad V since 1977 were as follows:

Year	percentage
1977	6·4
1978	6·4
1979	6·0
1980	5·4
1981	5·2
1982	5·8
1983	7·1

Similar figures are neither available for earlier years nor for students in public sector higher education.

Class Sizes

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the average size of classes in (a) maintained primary schools and (b) maintained secondary schools; and whether he has comparable information about independent primary schools and independent secondary schools.

Mr. Dunn: The average sizes of classes taught by one teacher in maintained primary and secondary schools in England in January 1984 were 24·7 and 20·4, respectively. Information about class sizes in independent schools is not collected by the Department.

Higher Education

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the age of the average first degree graduate from higher education in the United Kingdom in the most recent year for which information is available.

Mr. Brooke: Precise information is not readily available. The average age of first degree graduates has been estimated as 23 years using data on the age distribution of first-year first degree students in Great Britain.

Teachers (Dispute)

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will list any recent steps which he has taken to bring about a settlement of the teachers' dispute; and with what results.

Mr. Dunn: Last month my right hon. Friend made public the Government's readiness to make additional resources available for teachers' pay next year if agreement in principle can be reached by October on a reform of the current pay system designed to promote the Government's educational objectives and to provide improved promotion opportunities for good teachers. The Government are also seeking a clarification of teachers' duties and are prepared to consider alternative arrangements and funding for the midday supervision of pupils. This initiative requires a quick and constructive response, and my right hon. Friend hopes that this will be recognised by the local authority and the teachers' associations.

Special Education

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will list for (a) each local education authority and (b) for metropolitan counties, shire counties and outer London boroughs, the average difference in percentage terms between the amount spent on educating children with special needs in other local education authorities and the income received for educating children with special needs from other local education authorities at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Dunn: The amount of income received from other local education authorities for educating children with special needs is given in the table. The amounts are expressed as a percentage of the expenditure of each local education authority on the purchase of school places from other authorities for pupils with special educational needs.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list (a) for each local education authority and (b) for metropolitan counties, shire counties and outer London boroughs, the average percentage of expenditure allocated to children with special needs spent on (i) children educated within the local education authority, (ii) children educated outside the local education authority and (iii) the number and proportion of children with special needs represented by (a) and (b) in each case, at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Dunn: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in the Official Report (a) for each local education authority the number and (b) for metropolitan counties, shire counties and London boroughs the average number of pupils with special needs educated in another local education authority and received from another local education authority at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Dunn: Set out are, for each local education authority in England, the number of pupils as at January 1984 from outside the authority being educated in special schools within it, and the number of pupils from the authority being educated in special schools in other authorities. Corresponding averages for the metropolitan counties, shire counties and London boroughs, excluding ILEA, are also set out. The numbers of pupils with special needs receiving their education in primary, middle and secondary schools maintained by local education authorities other than that to which they are deemed to belong are not separately available.

DEFENCE

NATO Base, Stornoway

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is his current estimate of the cost of the expenditure on the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation base at Stornoway in the light of changes in the original plan.

Mr. Lee: The estimated cost remains within the forecast of £40 million given to the right hon. Member by my hon. Friend the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Royal Air Force on 19 January 1981 at column 49.

Offshore Patrol Vessel

Mr. George asked the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to seek private capital from City banks for the purchase of an offshore patrol vessel, OPV3, which will then be leased by his Department.

Mr. Lee: None.

United States Service Men

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply, Official Report, 17 May, column 264, how many United States service men stationed in the United Kingdom serve in units which are not formally committed to a North Atlantic Treaty Organisation command; and where those light transport and search and rescue units based in Britain and not committed to the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation are based.

Mr. Lee: As the hon. Member was told in my earlier answer, virtually all United States forces in the United Kingdom are here in support of NATO. The categories of commitment of individual units are, however, classified. The light transport aircraft and the search and rescue units mentioned in my earlier answer are based at RAF Mildenhall and RAF Woodbridge, respectively. There is a small number of United States personnel engaged in the operation and support of these aircraft, but it is not normally the practice to divulge numbers of personnel engaged on specific operations.

Statement on the Defence Estimates 1985

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many British divisions were included in figure 10 of annex A of the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1985, Cmnd. 9430.

Mr. Stanley: Figure 10 includes the four divisions which comprise 1(BR)Corps as well as a further division equivalent to take account of other British forces committed to NATO which are not formed into divisions.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether Portuguese forces were included in figure 11 of annex A to the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1985, Cmnd. 9430.

Mr. Stanley: Yes.

Operation Lionheart

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many British divisions and division equivalents were mobilised during Operation Lionheart.

Mr. Lee: Two armoured divisions in Germany and one infantry division from the United Kingdom took part in Exercise Lionheart. In addition, one armoured division provided exercise controllers and umpires.

Warsaw Pact

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether Romanian forces are integrated into the military command structure of the Warsaw pact.

Mr. Stanley: Romanian forces are not integrated into the military command structure of the Warsaw pact, but in time of crisis or war it is assessed that they would not operate independently of the wishes of the Soviet Union.

NATO (Short Range Nuclear Forces)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to announce a decision on the modernisation of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's short range nuclear forces.

Mr. Stanley: I shall answer shortly.

BAOR (Tactical Nuclear Weapons)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether any bilateral discussions have taken place between the United States and United Kingdom Governments on the modernisation of United States tactical nuclear weapons made available to the British Army of the Rhine; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: I shall answer shortly.

International Air Tattoo (Fairford)

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Air Force aircraft, and of which types, will take part in the international air tattoo at Royal Air Force Fairford.

Mr. Lee: A total of 44 RAF aircraft will take part in the international air tattoo at Royal Air Force Fairford. The aircraft types are:

Buccaneer	Lancaster
Bulldog	Lightning
Canberra	Meteor
Chinook	Nimrod
Chipmunk	Pembroke
Domini	Phantom
Gazelle	Puma
Harrier	Sea King
Hawk	Spitfire
Hercules	Tornado
Hunter	Vampire
Hurricane	Victor
Jaguar	Vulcan
Jet Provost	VC10
Jetstream

Of course, not all of these are in current RAF service.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total estimated cost of the participation of the Royal Air Force in the international air tattoo at Royal Air Force Fairford.

Mr. Lee: Some £7,000 in extra costs for the established display teams: the Red Arrows, Battle of Britain memorial flight, the vintage pair, the Falcons and the RAF police dog demonstration team. This is recovered from the organisers through standard charges. Appropriate extra costs incurred for the participation of other aircraft and equipment are also recovered, but no advance estimate of these is made.

Polaris

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give in current and constant prices the annual expenditure on Polaris from 1963 to the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Butler: I shall answer shortly.

Trident

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give in current and constant prices the annual expenditure on Trident from 1980 to the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Butler: Annual expenditure on Trident I and II to March 1985 is as follows:

Financial Year	80-81	81-82	82-83	83-84	84-85
	£ million
Current (Outturn) price	5	31	71	95	162
1984-85 prices and at £1–$1·38	5	44	89	107	162

The figure for 1984-85 financial year may be subject to minor adjustment.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will indicate the proportion of Trident expenditure spent and predicted to be spent in each of the five-year terms beginning 1980, 1985, 1990 and 1995.

Mr. Butler: Broadly, the proportion of Trident expenditure spent and predicted to be spent is somewhat under 5 per cent. up to the end of the 1984-85 financial year, building up to about 40 per cent. by the end of the decade and a little over 80 per cent. by 1995. This includes expenditure on Trident I and Trident II.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence in which year the 18-year Trident programme started.

Mr. Butler: The 18-year procurement period for Trident II started in 1982, as the previous Secretary of State for Defence made clear when he announced the programme on 11 March 1982 at column 979.

FH70 Howitzer

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the month and the year the FH-70 Howitzer entered service with the Army.

Mr. Lee: The FH-70 entered service with the Royal Artillery in December 1979.

Exercise Brave Defender

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether Greenham and Molesworth will play any role in Brave Defender.

Mr. Stanley: No.

Naval Estate, Portsmouth

Mr. Ian Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence what are his plans for the naval estate in Portsmouth; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: We have just concluded a study, known as the Portsea island naval requirements study, to reassess the most efficient way of using the naval estate on Portsea island and to the north of Portsmouth. The study was needed to develop the earlier "Slimtrain" plan, which followed Command 8288, in the light of changes in the shape, tasking and size of the Navy since then.

The study has been carried out by a team of external consultants tasked by the Property Services Agency. It has proposed and costed a number of ways in which the Navy's needs could be met. We have accepted a broad strategy for the next decade or so, and intend now to proceed to discussion with local authorities, trades unions, and others, so as to refine it further. Within this strategy, a number of details remain to be worked out, and these are currently being studied, The main element of our plan is the concentration, to the greatest extent feasible, of training activities and domestic accommodation in HMS Excellent/Whale Island. We envisage that this should allow instead the eventual closure of HMS Mercury, of Phoenix and HMS Vernon as already planned, and of the major part of the Royal Marine barracks, Eastney, subject to further study and to the outcome of consultation.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Housing Benefit

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, in view of the Government's expectation that the major structural reforms set out in the Green Paper, "Reform of Social Security", will be implemented in April 1987, any alteration to the structure of housing benefit provision will be made before this date.

Mr. Whitney: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement by my right hon. Friend on Tuesday 18 June at columns 169-172 which contained details of an adjustment to the rates taper above the needs allowance to be implemented this November.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the numbers of people who will lose housing benefit as a result of the changes announced on 18 June; and how many will be (a) up to £1 a week worse off, (b) up to £2 a week worse off, (c) up to £3 a week worse off and (d) more than £3 a week worse off.

Mr. Newton: Estimates of the numbers whose housing benefit will be less than it would otherwise have been because of the proposed increase in the rates taper above the needs allowance this November, offset by the real improvement in the dependants child addition to the needs allowance, are as follows:

Great Britain

	Number affected (thousands)
Under £1	1,720
Between £1-£2	230
Betwen £2-£3	20
Over £3	Less than 5,000

The average effect is estimated to be about 50 pence per week.

At the same time, there will be around one third of a million people whose housing benefit will be higher by up to 40p per child per week than it would otherwise have been, as a result of the real improvement in the dependant child addition to the needs allowance.

State Earnings-related Pension Scheme

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the cost of the state earnings-related pension scheme in 2034 as a percentage of gross domestic product.

Mr. Newton: There are no generally agreed forecasts of gross domestic product so far ahead into the future, but if its growth were assumed to be 2 per cent. between now and 2033-34, the cost of the state earnings-related pension scheme would rise to over 3 per cent. of gross domestic product in that year. This would be in addition to spending on the basic national insurance pension.

Nuclear Installations (Cancer)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied with the progress being made in his discussions on the prospective implementation of recommendations numbered 5 to 7 of the report of the advisory group chaired by Sir Douglas Black on the possible increased incidence of cancer in West Cumbria, relating to nuclear installations at Sellafield; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Following on from the discussions to which I referred in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Gloucestershire, West (Mr. Marland) on 9 May at columns 487-88, the following steps have been taken:

(a) The Government's Chief Medical Officer has set up a working party to consider how best to implement recommendation 5; this includes representatives of the Department of the Environment and the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate.

(b) The National Radiological Protection Board and clinicians in west Cumbria are collaborating in order to assay directly for levels of actinides.

(c) A whole-body monitoring study is being considered with the Department of the Environment.

(d) The Medical Research Council, which is funded by a grant-in-aid from the Science Vote of the Department of Education and Science, has been asked to advise our Department on what further work is possible.

Progress has been somewhat slower than with commissioning the extended epidemiological studies in recommendations 1 to 4. This is because we are moving into new areas of work which will advance both the collection and use of data and knowledge of the effects of radiation on people.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list and describe the research projects commissioned to implement the recommendations numbered 1 to 4 of the report of the advisory group chaired by Sir Douglas Black on the possible increased incidence of cancer in West Cumbria, relating to nuclear installations at Sellafield; and if he will estimate the approximate cost and duration of each project.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The information is in the table.

Black report recommendation	Title of project and name of director	Description	Approximate duration	Estimated total cost £
1	Case control study of leukaemia and lymphoma in young people in West Cumbria. Professor M. J. Gardner, MRC Environmental Unit, University of Southampton. Tinnitus

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what training facilities within the National Health Service exist for those wishing to study tinnitus and how that compares with 1979.

Mr. John Patten: We would expect consultants in ear, nose and throat surgery and audiological medicine to provide supervised experience in treating tinnitus as an integral part of practical postgraduate medical education, but we have centrally no detail of the position now or in 1979.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Social Services where the principle centres are situated for the study and treatment of tinnitus.

Mr. John Patten: Facilities for the treatment of tinnitus sufferers are available at all hospital ear, nose and throat departments. The principal centres for the study of tinnitus include:

The University of Keele, Department of Communications and Neuroscience; the University of London, Institute of Laryngology and Otology; the University of London, Guy's hospital medical school; University College London, department of phonetics and linguistics; the University of Nottingham, institute of hearing research; the University of Wales, Welsh national school of medicine; and the University of Wales institute of science and technology, department of applied psychology.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many specialists there are in post in the National Health Service involved in the treatment of tinnitus.

Mr. John Patten: Depending upon the condition of which it is symptomatic tinnitus is usually treated by consultants in ear, nose and throat surgery and audiological medicine whose numbers are given in the table.

Consultants in ENT surgery and audiological medicine (England and Wales—September 1984)

	Numbers of consultants NHS paid	Honourary appointments
ENT Surgery	367	8
Audiological Medicine	12	5

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the latest estimated number of tinnitus sufferers in the United Kingdom.

Mr. John Patten: It was estimated in 1981 that some 15 per cent. of the adult population experienced symptoms of varying frequency, degree and duration which might be defined broadly as tinnitus, and that some 2 per cent. of adults experienced continuous tinnitus, a proportion of whom would be seriously troubled by the symptom.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when the curriculum for ear, nose and throat specialists was last revised; and if it now provides opportunity for detailed study into the causes and treatment of tinnitus.

Mr. John Patten: The Royal College of Surgeons' specialist advisory committee sets the content of pre- and post- fellowship surgical training in otolaryngology covering the full range of disorders of the ear, nose and throat including tinnitus. I understand that the Royal College reviewed its criteria this month.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of the ear, nose and throat curriculum measured by time is specifically devoted to the study of tinnitus.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that the Royal College of Surgeons does not have such detailed information.

Departmental Offices (Public Toilets)

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the policy of his Department regarding the provision of public toilets in Department of Health and Social Security offices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The Department's policy is to provide public toilets in its local offices wherever practicable. In all new buildings the provision of public toilets is a design specification; 70 per cent. of local offices have public toilet facilities.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total number of claimants for supplementary benefit for the Burnley travel-to-work area for the last month for which statistics are available; and what were the comparative figures for the same month in 1983 and 1984.

Mr. Whitney: The Burnley travel-to-work area is covered by two offices of the Department, Burnley and Accrington, but their boundaries are not conterminous. The total number of persons in receipt of supplementay benefit on 10 May 1985 and the previous two years was:

	Burnley	Accrington
10 May 1985	17,062	7,769
8 May 1984	16,167	7,591
7 May 1983	15,335	7,444

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total number of supplementary benefit appeals for the Burnley travel-to-work area for the last month for which figures are available.

Mr. Whitney: During a four-week period ended 4 June 1985 a total of 97 supplementary benefit appeals were lodged at the Burnley, Accrington and Rossendale local offices, which cover the Burnley area.

Rheumatology (Operations)

Mr. Penhaligon asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list for each district health authority in England the current average waiting time for an operation in the rheumatology department.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is not available centrally.

Social Services (Green Paper)

Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the Government's Green Paper on the future of social services.

Mr. John Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) on 18 June at column 101.

Nurses (Back Pain)

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he received the views of the independent assessors subsequent to his receipt of the research report into back pain amongst nurses in August 1984; and if he will place copies of these documents in the Library.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We received the report of independent assessors in January this year. I am advised that there is an accepted practice that assessments of this nature are confidential to the Chief Scientist.

Nurses (Pay)

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will allocate an additional £6 million to the estimates of expenditure for the North-West Thames regional health authority in 1986-87 in order to meet the nurses' pay award.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Health authority allocations for 1986-87 will, as usual, depend on the outcome of the Government's public expenditure survey.

Drug Addicts

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give a breakdown, by opiate and non-opiate drug dependency, of the number of addicts in each district health authority within the North-East Thames regional health authority for each month since 1982.

Mr. John Patten: The available information on the number of addicts in each district health authority within the North-East Thames region is set out on pages 39 to 41 of the report "Drug Misuse: Prevalence and Service Provision," copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Drugs (Rehabilitation)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list, by regional health authority, the number of residential rehabilitation places for drug dependants for each year since 1978.

Mr. John Patten: This information is not available centrally. Information on the current distribution of residential rehabilitation facilities is contained in the report "Drug Misuse: Prevalence and Service Provision," copies of which are in the Library.

Vaccine-Damaged Children

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many families have so far received the £10,000 payment for vaccine damage to children.

Mr. Whitney: Up to 18 June, awards have been made in 803 cases as a result of claims under the Vaccine Damage Payments Act 1979.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what would be the level of today's £10,000 payment under the vaccine damage scheme if its real value were to be restored to that in the year when the scheme was introduced; what steps he proposes to take to increase the payment to that level; and if he will make a statement;

(2) why he has not maintained in real terms the value of vaccine damage payments since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The present equivalent of £10,000 in 1979 is £17,750. When my right hon. Friend made his statement about the annual uprating of social security benefits on 18 June, he announced at column 171 our intention to increase the payment to £20,000.

Benefits

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which state benefits are not increased in line with increases in the cost of living.

Mr. Newton: Under section 125 of the Social Security Act 1975 the following benefits are required to be uprated annually at least in line with the rise in prices:

Retirement pension—Categories A, B, C and D
Widows' benefits
Invalidity benefits
Child's special allowance
Guardian's allowance
Industrial injuries benefits
Attendance allowance
Severe disablement allowance
Invalid care allowance
Unemployment benefit
Sickness benefit
Maternity allowance
Dependency additions paid with the benefits listed.

Decisions on whether to uprate other benefits, and, if so, by how much, are taken annually in the light of the prevailing circumstances.

Student Nurses

Mr. Campbell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the rate at which the salary of a student nurse has increased during each of the last 10 years, according to grade; and how this compares with the rate of inflation;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the average weekly wage of a student nurse according to each of the three stages of training; and how this compares with each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The table shows, for a student nurse in each of the three years of training the basic weekly wage for the years 1974 to 1986 and the movements in those salaries as measured against changes in the retail prices index. The figures exclude the effect of the reduction in nurses' working hours from 40 to 37½ per week in 1980-81. We do not have comparable information on earnings.

Voluntary Redundancy (Benefits)

Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent instructions have been issued to unemployment benefit offices regarding the eligibility for unemployment benefit of workers who accept voluntary redundancy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Voluntary Organisations (Financial Provision)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting which he had recently with the Director of the Spastics Society and with MIND and other voluntary organisations about their ability to provide services for people they help within their present financial provision.

Mr. John Patten: No such meeting has taken place.

Intensive Care Baby Units and Revision Surgery

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will allocate additional resources to regional health authorities to enable them to improve nursing staff levels in intensive care baby units;

(2) if he will allocate additional resources to health authorities to enable them to improve facilities for revision surgery required by patients after hip replacement operations.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have this year allocated to regional health authorities in England additional cash of over £500 million or 5·5 per cent. In addition, they have told us that they plan to generate about £150 million from their cost improvement programmes. We expect them to make substantial improvements in patient services from within these extra resources. But it is for health authorities to determine their own priorities between all the various specialties, including intensive baby care and orthopaedic surgery, in the light of national guidance and local circumstances.

So far as intensive baby care is concerned, the third report of the Maternity Services Advisory Committee offers guidance on the care of small and ill babies and on how services may best be organised. We have commended this advice to health authorities to consider what action could and should be taken locally in response to it.

Limited List Prescribing

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report a copy of the reply which he received from the British Medical Association in response to his offer to it to introduce an appeal system which would allow general practitioners in certain cases to prescribe drugs currently excluded from the limited list.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have not yet received a formal response from the British Medical Association, though I expect one soon.

Demographic Trends

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his latest assessment of demographic trends as they affect the demand for health service facilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: On the basis of the latest population projections published by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys, the increase in demographic demand on hospital and community health services is currently estimated to be about 1 per cent. This is not to say, of course, that the only way in which the service can keep pace with increasing demand is by increasing spending by exactly the same proportion.

"The Health Service in England"

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of pamphlets entitled "The Health Service in England" which have been sent out by his Department in the last 12 months to community health councils and family practitioner committees in the West Midlands county; which specific ones received them; and what replies he has received in response to the information in them.

Mr. John Patten: Thirty thousand copies of the leaflet were sent by the Department on publication to the West Midlands health authority. Local distribution arrangements were left to the authority itself. To date, we have not received any response centrally.

West Midlands

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of women who have been registered as claiming supplementary, unemployment or housing benefit in the west midlands region in each single year since 1979.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that this information is not available. Statistics on totals of claimants are not differentiated by sex.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of disabled citizens who have claimed supplementary benefit in the west midlands region in each single year since 1979 and the number of home help service personnel who have been employed in that region in each single year during the same period.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many midwives have been employed by the National Health Service in the west midlands region in each year since 1979; and what are the levels of pay which they have received in each year during the same period.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The information is given in the tables.

NHS state certified midwives employed in West Midlands RHA*
Staff in post at 30 September: whole-time equivalents

	Number
1979	1,640
1980	1,680

* Including agency midwives.
† Latest date for which information validated to this level of detail.

The basic salary, at the maximum of the scale, for staff midwives and district midwives* was as follows

		Salary £
	District Midwife	4,949
1 April 1979	Staff Midwife	3,813
	District Midwife	6,807
1 April 1980	Staff Midwife	5,119

23 August 1982	Staff Midwife	6,094
	District Midwife	8,751
1 April 1984	Staff Midwife	6,582

* Includes Midwifery Sister.

As a result of Government decisions on the recommendations of the Review Body for Nursing Staff, Midwives, Health Visitors and Professions Allied to Medicine from 1 April 1985 the maximum basic salary of a district midwife will be £9,254 and of a staff midwife £6,960, with a further increase from 1 February 1986 to £10,000 and £7,175 respectively.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of patients who have been give coronary bypass surgery in the west midlands region in each year since 1979.

Mr. John Patten: This information is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of the West Midlands regional health authority who may be able to provide the information requested.

Mucodyne

Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations he has now received in relation to the exclusion of the drug mucodyne from the National Health Service prescribing list.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have received more than 300 letters about the drug mucodyne and other oral mucolytics. The exact number could be established only at disproportionate cost.

We are making arrangements for the committee which will review the selected list to consider these drugs at its first meeting. We will announce details of the committee soon.

Retirement Pensions

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the amounts which have been spent on the provision of retirement pensions in each year since 1979.

Mr. Whitney: Total benefit expenditure on retirement pensions including basic and additional component, graduated pension and increments is as follows:

	£ million
1979-80	8,816
1980-81	10,526
1981-82	12,126
1982-83	13,549

Social Security Review

Mr. John asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the growth in the value of the benefits covered by figure 2 of volume 1 of the social security Green Paper in relation to the increase in (a) average male gross earnings and (b) average male net earings between 1949 and 1984.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 12 June 1985, c. 486]: The information is as follows:

Percentage change in benefit rates in relation to earnings November 1949-November 1984

Benefit	Percentage increase or decrease (−) in relation to:
	Gross earnings	Net earnings
Supplementary benefit long term rate	32·3	62·3

Supplementary benefit scale rate for a child 5-10	−5·1	16·4

Adult benefits are single person rates.

Gross earnings=adult male manual workers, average earnings November 1949-November 1984.

Net earnings=adult male manual workers, average earnings for single person without children, net of tax and national insurance contributions.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Beith asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed on 20 May, Official Report, column 350, how many of the 97 vessels decommissioned under the current scheme have been scrapped, how many transferred to a third country and how many assigned to a purpose other than fishing; and whether he will subdivide these figures between England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Mr. MacGregor: The information requested is as follows:

Number of vessels decommissioned by

	England	Wales	Scotland	Northern Ireland	Total
a) scrapping	15	5	7	—	27
b) permanent transfer to a third country	7	—	1	—	8
c) assigned to a purpose other than fishing	34	2	25	1	62
					97

Cattle Imports

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cattle were imported from Northern Ireland during the last 12 months; what were the corresponding figures for 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The numbers of live home-bred Northern Ireland cattle* entering Great Britain were as follows:

	Thousand head
April 1984—March 1985	3·6
January—December 1980	12·4

* Fat, store and breeding cattle, and calves.

Salmon

Mr. Onslow asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has as to the cost involved in buying in all commercial netting rights for salmon in England and Welsh coastal waters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: There is a public right of fishing in the majority of coastal and estuarial waters around England and Wales. While salmon fishing in these waters is regulated by such methods as licensing, the buying in of these rights would require substantial modifications to our fisheries legislation. Given the extensive nature of the public rights and the absence of any central record of privately owned commercial netting rights for salmon, it is not possible to estimate what the cost of buying in all these rights might be.

Mr. Onslow asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he has taken to identify the English rivers where the escapement of spawning salmon is insufficient to maintain wild stocks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: My Department is in regular contact with the water authorities whose duty it is to maintain, improve and develop the salmon fisheries in their areas. While concern has been expressed about recruitment levels on the Yorkshire Esk, the Lune and the Torridge, I am not aware of any case in which the escapement of spawning salmon is insufficient to maintain stocks.

EC (Agricultural Expenditure)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the percentage of total European Economic Community spending which was devoted to agriculture; what was the percentage of total European Economic Community spending devoted to the storage or disposal of food surpluses, respectively, in each of the years from 1973 to 1984, respectively; and what estimate he has made of the comparable percentage figures in 1985.

Mr. Jopling [pursuant to his reply, 20 June 1985]: The information requested is set out in the following table:

Year	CAP expenditure as percentage of total EC expenditure	Food storage and disposal costs as percentage of total EC expenditure*
1973	82·4	57·7
1974	75·4	40·4
1975	78·1	40·0
1976	76·6	49·9
1977	74·3	48·1
1978	79·2	55·3
1979	75·7	56·9
1980	73·3	55·8

ENERGY

Coal Mining Industry

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will take steps to protect the income of those miners who have accepted redundancy under the terms of the national agreements and who now face the loss of unemployment benefit.

Mr. David Hunt: I am looking urgently at the problem of mineworkers who have accepted redundancy and who may lose unemployment benefit. The Government are considering ways of resolving the problem.

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many persons are employed by the National Coal Board at the present time; how many he expects to be so employed in one year's time; and what was the number employed six years ago.

Mr. David Hunt: I understand from the National Coal Board that at 8 June 1985 there were 166,104 men on colliery books. In June 1979 the number was 232,546. I can make no accurate estimate of numbers on 21 June [illegible]6.

ENVIRONMENT

Households (South-East England)

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) pursuant to the reply of 22 May, Official Report, columns 436-38, what proportion of new households expected to form in England in the decade 1981 to 1991 is accounted for by the south-east region;

(2) pursuant to the reply of 22 May, Official Report, columns 436-38, upon what percentage of sample data from the 1981 census his Department has based the statement that the categories of young single people living on their own or heading other households are disproportionately common in the south-east and particularly in London;

(3) pursuant to the reply of 22 May, Official Report, columns 436-38, whether the total number of new households expected to form in the decade 1981 to 1991 in each of the different sub-regions of England has been adjusted on a pro rata basis to the change projected in the England total over the same period;

(4) pursuant to the reply of 22 May, Official Report, columns 436-38, what weightings have been used for each of the eight regions in England to adjust the sub-national totals of new households expected to form between 1981 and 1991 to the totals for England as a whole.

Sir George Young: I have written to the hon. Member.

Right to Buy (Southwark)

Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what information he has as to when Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Bratt of 52 Kennoldes may expect to receive draft legal documents in respect of the purchase of their home from Southwark council;

(2) if he will investigate the reasons for the delay that Mr. and Mrs. E. Hemmings are experiencing in the application to buy their home at 5 Hillsborough road from Southwark council;

(3) what information he has as to when Mr. and Mrs. J. Baldwin of 9 Hillsborough road may expect to complete the purchase of their house from Southwark council.

Sir George Young: My Department has investigated the reasons for the delays in Mr. and Mrs. Hemmings' case. I understand that their right to buy application, like that of Mr. and Mrs. Bratt and Mr. and Mrs. Baldwin was delayed principally by Southwark council's failure, as yet, to produce a standard form of transfer for leasehold houses. I expect legal documentation to be dispatched before the end of June and for completion to take place within a month thereafter. I regret the delays caused by Southwark council.

Local Government Expenditure

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will rank in descending order using their 1985-86 budgets all English local authorities on the basis of the percentage above or below their expenditure targets for 1985-86, showing in each case the percentage above or below their grant-related expenditure assessments for 1985-86;

(2) if he will rank in descending order using their 1985-86 budgets all English local authorities on the basis of the percentage above or below their grant-related expenditure assessments for 1985-86, showing in each case the percentage above or below their expenditure target for 1985-86.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: I have today placed the available information in the Library.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his Department's current estimates of the total amount by which local government expenditure is expected to exceed in 1985-86 (a) grant-related expenditure assessments and (b) expenditure targets; and if he will supply a breakdown of those figures in each category listed for each individual authority in terms of both total money amount and percentage.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: Based on English local authorities budget returns, aggregate total expenditure is estimated to exceed grant-related expenditure by £820 million and the aggregate of expenditure targets by £266 million.

I have today placed the available information for individual authorities in the Library.

Bass Charrington plc (Planning Appeal)

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment to what extent his inspector investigated the incidence of coal mining subsidence on the site of the former Gate Inn, Upper Longdon, near Rugeley, during the course of the inquiry into the appeal by Bass Charrington plc to develop the land occupied by the former public house.

Mr. Macfarlane: The inspector accepted the recommendation of the National Coal Board that subsidence affected the northern part of the appeal site so that development should not take place there, nor within 9 m. of the southern break line crossing it. He was also aware that the board had no current plans for mining which should affect the site. He was able to see the effects of subsidence for himself when he visited the site.

Poll Tax

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, as part of the review of methods of financing local government, his Department has made any assessment of the number of people registered to vote who would be liable to pay a poll tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We are looking at a wide range of issues including this one. The local government finance studies are still in progress and I am not in a position to make a statement about particular aspects of the work being done.

Pollution

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the levels of ozone and other photochemical pollutants observed during the summer months in the United Kingdom over the last 10 years for which figures are available, and their effect on plants, materials and human health.

Mr. Macfarlane: Detailed figures for recorded ozone levels are published on behalf of my Department by Harwell laboratory and by the Department of Trade and Industry's Warren Spring laboratory. Concentrations are highly variable and it is thus not possible for me to summarise the figures here. As a broad indication, summer levels in rural Oxfordshire and Suffolk average about 20 to 30 parts per billion, but on occasions have reached levels substantially higher for short periods. Some measurements of peroxyacytyl nitrate are also published by Harwell, but this is not measured on a routine basis*.

There is no evidence that levels of photochemical oxidants normally experienced in the United Kingdom pose a threat to human health or to materials. My Department is sponsoring research aimed at improving our knowledge of both the United Kingdom photoxidant climate and its effect on plants and trees.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to secure an improvement in the present level of monitoring of air pollution in urban areas; whether he will make a statement on the future of air pollution monitoring at present undertaken by the scientific services branch of the Greater London council; and whether he intends to take steps to continue the monitoring of air quality at the County hall site in central London.

Mr. Macfarlane: The Government's existing programme of air quality monitoring covers those pollutants, such as smoke and sulphur dioxide, which are most significant in urban areas. In addition, we are about to establish monitoring networks for nitrogen dioxide and lead in air—both of which include sites in urban areas. After the abolition of the GLC, the future of air pollution monitoring at present undertaken by the scientific services branch will be a matter for the London boroughs, which already have responsibility for the control of air pollution. It is proposed, however, that the London residuary body should be able to take on staff and facilities on a temporary basis, if the boroughs wish it to do so, while long-term arrangements are being finalised.

General Rate Act 1967

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans (i) to review or (ii) to seek to amend section 25 of the General Rate Act 1967.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Section 25 was amended in the Rates Act 1984 to make it easier for rating authorities to give relief to parts of properties which are temporarily unoccupied. There are no plans at present for any future changes.

Community Land and Workspace Services Ltd.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements he has considered for continuing public support for Community Land and Workspace Services Ltd. upon abolition of the Greater London council; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: In most cases, responsibility for grants to local organisations will fall to the London boroughs. Clause 48 of the Local Government Bill provides the boroughs with powers to fund collectively organisations whose activities are not for profit and which benefit an area extending beyond the boundaries of an individual authority.

Water Rates

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether a code of practice on the treatment of arrears of water rates has been adopted by any of the water authorities in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macfarlane: I am pleased to tell my hon. Friend that a code of practice for domestic customers was adopted by all the water authorities in England and Wales in 1983.

A leaflet, issued by the water industry, entitled "Water Services Bills—How to get help if you can't pay your Bill" is available from all the water authorities, and I am sending my hon. Friend a copy.

Widdicombe Inquiry

Mr. Straw asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he expects the interim report of the Widdicombe inquiry into local government advertising to be published before the summer recess; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: We have asked the Widdicombe inquiry to submit by the end of July an interim report on local authorities' involvement in publicity and political campaigning.

Mr. Straw asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to make use of his existing legislative powers under sections 137 and 142 of the Local Government Act 1972 in relation to local government advertising before the Widdicombe committee of inquiry reports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: My right hon. Friend has no powers under sections 137 and 42 of the Local Government Act 972 in relation to local government advertising.

Council House Sales

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the local authorities which operate a bonus payments scheme for staff who use spare time to visit local authority tenants to persuade them to purchase their homes.

Mr. Gow: Information on such schemes, which are a matter for the authorities concerned, is not collected centrally. So far as I am aware, only one authority operates such a scheme.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether the strategic guidance, in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council, will set out for each borough the total number of new dwellings to be provided and the split between private and public provision;

(2) whether the strategic guidance, in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council, will indicate the number and locations of retail superstores in each of the London boroughs;

(3) whether the strategic guidance, in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council, will indicate the additional shopping floorspace to be planned for in each borough;

(4) whether the strategic guidance will, in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council, set out for each borough the employment total to be planned for;

(5) whether the strategic guidance will, in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council, set out for each borough the location and types of industry and warehousing appropriate for that borough in the light of London's industrial structure and labour market;

(6) whether the strategic guidance, in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council, will set out the guidelines on the extent to which the boroughs, in preparing their unitary development plan, must take account of planning requirements for ethnic minorities, women and people with disabilities.

Mr. Macfarlane: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 31 January 1985, at columns 280-81, by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government to the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn). The precise content of any strategic guidance which may be issued by the Secretary of State following the abolition of the Greater London council will be determined taking into account the views of the London boroughs an others. It is doubtful, however, whether any strategic guidance on land use planning would need to deal with all the matters or refer to them in all the detail implied by the hon. Member.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if the strategic guidance will, in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council, be based upon up-to-date information and research on relevant population, employment, commuting, social and other trends.

Mr. Macfarlane: The strategic guidance will take into account, inter alia, the best information available on these matters when the guidance is drawn up.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department will make available to London boroughs the information, research and data which it will be collecting to prepare strategic guidance.

Mr. Macfarlane: My right hon. Friend expects to be able to provide to London boroughs any relevant information which he collects.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department has had any meetings with the Association of London Borough Planning Officers subsequent to his Department's letter of 23 January; and what changes he has made to proposals for London planning in the event of abolition.

Mr. Macfarlane: No meeting has been held with the Association of London Borough Planning Officers following the letter to it of 23 January offering a meeting. Apart from minor amendments, no changes have been made to the proposals for London planning in the event of abolition, but an undertaking has been given to bring forward an amendment on Third Reading of the Bill in another place.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many professional staff in his Department's London regional office are at present concerned with policy aspects of strategic planning in London; and how many he envisages being employed on such matters after 1 April 1986 if the abolition of the Greater London council proceeds.

Mr. Macfarlane: The directorate responsible for land use planning in Greater London has 10 professionally employed staff, any of whom may be called upon to deal with aspects of strategic planning.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what matters were discussed and what decisions were taken at the recent meeting between the Minister for Local Government, the right hon. Member for Mole Valley (Mr. Baker), and the London Boroughs Association on planning arrangements in the event of the Greater London council being abolished.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: My noble Friend Lord Elton and I met representatives of the London Boroughs Association on 3 June in order to hear their views on the matters to which my noble Friend referred in his speech during the Committee stage of the Local Government Bill in another place on 30 April at column 223.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what matters were discussed and what decisions made at the meeting on 22 April between the Minister for Local Government the right hon. Member for Mole Valley (Mr. Baker) and representatives of the London and South-East regional planning conference on strategic planning in the region in the event of the Greater London council being abolished.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I did not meet representatives of the London and South-East regional planning conference (SERPLAN) on 22 April, but on that day there was a discussion between my noble Friend Lord Elton and representatives of SERPLAN, the Association of County Councils, and the Association of District Councils in order to obtain their views on planning arrangements for London.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make a statement on the committee report on spare rib submitted to him by the Greater London council in support of its application under section 7 of the Local Government (Interim Provisions) Act;

(2) if he will make a statement on the committee report on searchlight submitted to him by the Greater London council in support of its application under section 7 of the Local Government (Interim Provisions) Act;

(3) if he will make a statement on the committee report on the women's peace bus submitted to him by the Greater London council in support of its application under section 7 of the Local Government (Interim Provisions) Act.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The GLC's applications and supporting documents are still being considered. I hope that a substantive response will be issued shortly.

London Docklands

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current percentage of owner-occupied housing in the London Docklands Development Corporation area on the basis of (i) housing completions (ii) housing completions and new starts (iii) housing completions, starts and schemes with planning permission, respectively.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 3 June 1985, c. 53]: The information requested is as follows:

(i) of the housing stock in the LDDC area at 31 March 1985 (including 2,446 new houses completed and occupied since 1981), 15 per cent. of dwellings were owner-occupied;

(ii) when schemes currently under construction are completed, the percentage could rise to about 23 per cent. The figure may, however, be lower because the total number of dwellings which may be acquired by housing associations is not known at this stage;

(iii) when numbers of existing dwellings, new completions, units started and units with planning permission (on both LDDC and other land) are taken together, the percentage of owner-occupation in Docklands may be about 37 per cent. Here, again, acquisitions by housing associations could lead to a lower figure.

TRANSPORT

London Underground (Incidents)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Transport if the railway inspectorate is to investigate the incidents on the Central line recently when numerous trains were damaged by an unaligned section of conductor rail near St. Paul's; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: London Regional Transport reported the circumstances of the damage to trains to the railway inspectorate, as required by statute. The inspectorate is satisfied that the cause has been established and that measures are being taken to reduce the chances of a recurrence. Unlike the difficulties experienced in November 1982 on the Central line, described in the railway inspectorate's published annual report for 1982, the problem this time was not a misaligned conductor rail, but settlement of the track following night-time maintenance work.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate London Regional Transport has made of the cost (a) in lost revenue and (b) in repairs to stock and track, of the recent incidents on the Central line arising from an unaligned section of conductor rail near St. Paul's; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I understand from London Regional Transport that preliminary estimates suggest the loss of revenue to be about £10-20,000 and the cost of repairs to the rolling stock and track to be in the order of £40,000.

Merchant Navy (Defence Role)

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the terms of reference of the shipping economics advisory group study on the availability of merchant shipping for a defence role.

Mr. Ridley: The terms of reference of the study are classified, and were not published in the recent report from the House of Commons Defence Committee on the use of merchant shipping for defence purposes, but the annex to the notes by the Ministry of Defence in that report—page 34 — indicates the work the consultants were requested to undertake.

Motorways

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a list showing for each year since 1979 the residual life statistics derived from deflectograph surveys of the motorway network in each year.

Mrs. Chalker: Regular deflectograph surveys of the English motorway network started in 1983. Estimates from the 1983 and 1984 surveys give approximate residual live figures for the network as follows:—

Residual Life	Proportion of Network
	1983	1984
	per cent.	per cent.
Up to 5 years	24	20
6 to 10 years	12	18
11 to 15 years	23	20
16 years and over	41	42

Small changes in these figures are not significant.

Road Traffic (Driving Instruction) Act 1984

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he proposes to bring into effect the Road Traffic (Driving Instruction) Act 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Most of the provisions of the Act were introduced on 20 May 1985. Section 1 of the Act relating to a requirement for driving instructors to display their official identification documents in tuition cars has yet to be implemented. Preparation of identification documents suitable for this purpose is in hand and we expect to bring this remaining provision into operation later this year.

London Regional Transport

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he is satisfied with the reorganisation of London Regional Transport.

Mrs. Chalker: The creation by LRT of underground, bus and bus engineering subsidiaries at the end of March this year was an important step towards improving management accountability and business efficiency within LRT.

A17-A607 Leadenham (Accidents)

Mr. Douglas Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many road accidents have occurred within a radius of three quarters of a mile from the junction of the A17 and A607 at Leadenham, Lincolnshire, during each of the following periods: 1980 to 1985, 1975 to 1980 and 1970 to 1975;

(2) how many fatalities have occurred as a result of road accidents that have happened on roads within his responsibility within a three to four miles radius of the A17, A607 junction at Leadenham during each of the years 1975 to 1984, respectively.

Mrs. Chalker: I regret that the information is not readily available. I shall write to my hon. Friend.

A45 (Maintenance)

Mr. Lord asked the Secretary of State for Transport what improvements or remedial works to the A45 between Bury St. Edmunds and Ipswich are currently being deferred; and if he will give details.

Mrs. Chalker: No national schemes and no remedial works have been deferred. It will not now be possible to start work on the Quarries Cross improvement before the financial year 1987-88.

Pedal Cycle Crash Helmets

Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to expedite a decision on the setting up of a British standard for pedal cycle crash helmets.

Mrs. Chalker: The British Standards Institution decided earlier this year to set up a committee to prepare a standard for pedal cycle protective helmets and I understand the committee has already commenced its work.

A41 (Hemel Hempstead-Bourne End Bypass)

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for Transport if it remains his intention that work on the A41 Hemel Hempstead and Bourne End bypass should commence in 1986-87; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The report "National Roads, England 1985" published on 20 June, following my review of the road programme, places the A41 Berkhamsted and Kings Langley bypasses in the part of the programme for start of construction in the period April 1987 to March 1989.

Road Assessment Studies

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements are in force for local groups to meet the consultants involved in the road assessment studies being undertaken in London.

Mrs. Chalker: The consultants undertaking the London assessment studies consulted widely with local groups and also advertised for comments. They are meeting all groups who ask to see them.

Cycle Tracks

Mr. Haselhurst asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he is going to send out for consultation a draft of the advice he plans to issue to local authorities on the Cycle Tracks Act and the cycle tracks regulations.

Mrs. Chalker: As soon as possible.

British Rail

Mr. Bendall asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, when he next meets the chairman of British Rail, he will raise the matter of increases to the British Rail cheap inter-city saver return fares scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The decision was British Rail's. It is the board's responsibility to determine fares. I will, however, draw my hon. Friend's concern to the chairman's attention.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Lord Chancellor's Ecclesiastical Patronage Secretary

Mr. Greenway asked the Attorney-General why no Lord Chancellor's ecclesiastical patronage secretary has been appointed since Christmas 1984; and what proposals there are to fill the post.

The Attorney-General: The office of ecclesiastical secretary to the Lord Chancellor is not vacant. A new assistant secretary is expected to take up his appointment on 29 July.

Law Lords (Retirement)

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Attorney-General if he will list the latest dates on which each of the Law Lords and the Lords of Appeal in Ordinary have to retire.

The Attorney-General: The relevant dates of retirement are as follows:

	Retirement date
The Right Honourable The Lord Fraser of Tullybelton	3 February 1986
The Right Honourable The Lord Scarman OBE	29 July 1988
The Right Honourable The Lord Diplock	Not subject to a statutory retirement age.
The Right Honourable The Lord Keith of Kinkel	7 February 1997
The Right Honourable The Lord Roskill	6 February 1986
The Right Honourable The Lord Bridge of Harwich	26 February 1992
The Right Honourable The Lord Brandon of Oakbrook MC	3 June 1995
The Right Honourable The Lord Brightman	20 June 1986
The Right Honourable The Lord Templeman MBE	3 March 1995
The Right Honourable The Lord Griffiths MC	26 September 1998

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Official Debt

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration has been given to writing off official debt due to the United Kingdom from Vietnam, Laos, Senegal and South Yemen.

Mr. Raison: We do not think it appropriate to write off official aid debts for Vietnam under the retrospective terms adjustment arrangements because of Vietnam's human rights record and because it is in default on past British aid loan repayments. South Yemen is also in default on past British aid loan repayments and no consideration is being given to the application of RTA. Laos did not have any outstanding loan repayments to the United Kingdom at the time RTA was introduced in 1978. The country has since begun to repay a small interest free loan but no consideration is currently being given to the application of RTA. We have no plan to write off aid debts in respect of Senegal. The country has a per caput income above the RTA threshold (currently $400 in 1983) and is not included in the list of least developed countries.

Aid Programme (Export Orders)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those United Kingdom companies which have gained export orders of £50,000 or more from the aid programme in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Raison: The Overseas Development Administration does not maintain comprehensive statistics which show aid funded contracts broken down by individual British companies, but information is available in respect of contracts supported under the aid trade provision.

In 1984 the following companies gained export orders of £50,000 or more with ATP support:

Balfour Beatty Ltd.
Northern Engineering Industries/Parsons Ltd.
Sulzer Bros. (UK) Ltd.
General Electric Co. plc
Standard Telephones & Cables Ltd.
UK Airports Group
L. H. Manderstam
Halcrow

Rural Investment Overseas Ltd.
Transmark
Watermeyer, Legge, Piesold and Ulman
Ewbank Consulting Ltd.
British Teleconsult

This list does not include British firms which as sub-contractors may have gained orders in excess of £50,000 from the lead companies listed above.

International Fund for Agricultural Development

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why Britain refuses to make financial assistance available to the international fund for agricultural development.

Mr. Raison: There is no question of the Government refusing to make financial assistance available. We have paid all our contributions due under the initial funding and the first replenishment, and we are ready to contribute a similar share of the second replenishment if and when that is approved.

When the second replenishment is in place, we shall consider whether to contribute to IFAD's new, voluntary special programme for africa. We have our own very effective bilateral aid programme however, and any additional contribution to IFAD would inevitably leave us with less money for that.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Minced Beef

Sir Peter Mills asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will seek to persuade the Council of Ministers to introduce a minced beef directive.

Mrs. Fenner: Discussions on common rules for trade in minced meat are already taking place in the Community in order to set satisfactory arrangements to protect public and animal health.

Savernake Forest

Mr. Charles Morrison asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the cost, subdivided so far as possible, to the Forestry Commission of the recent hippie invasion of Savernake forest.

Mrs. Fenner: The estimated cost is as follows:

Staff costs (including wages, overtime, travel and subsistence and vehicles)	15,500
Legal fees and administrative costs	1,800
Loss of commercial recreation revenue and disruption to forest operations	3,200
Restitution of the site	5,200
Total	25,700

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the percentage rise in expenditure on the common agricultural policy each year since 1980; and what increase is estimated for 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Jopling: The percentage rise in expenditure on the common agricultural policy in each year between 1980 and 1985 compared with the previous year is as follows:

	Percentage
1980	+9·8
1981	−3·1
1982	+12·9
1983	+27·2
*1984	+14·8
†1985	+8·6

* Provisional † Budget

The preliminary draft budget for 1986 has not yet been published.

Unpasteurised Milk

Mr. Freud asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he proposes to publish health warnings on cartons of unpasteurised milk; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: Under existing regulations, all milk sold under the special designation "untreated" must also be clearly labelled "raw unpasteurised milk" irrespective of whether it is sold in cartons or in bottles. This requirement was introduced with effect from 1 January 1982 and is intended to ensure that consumers are aware of the nature of the product that they are buying. We have no plans to introduce further labelling requirements.

Pesticides

Mr. Nellist asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how often the Government's advisory committee on pesticides meets.

Mrs. Fenner: The advisory committee on pesticides is scheduled to meet six times per year and its scientific subcommittee nine times. Facilities are provided for additional meetings when necessary.

Mr. Nellist asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what products, currently on sale in Britain, contain the chemicals 2,4,5-T or 2,4-D;

(2) which manufacturers currently produce products containing the chemicals 2,4-D.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 20 June 1985, c. 215]: Proprietary products cleared for use in the United Kingdom containing 2,4,5-T as the sole active ingredient or in mixture with other active ingedients are marketed by a variety of companies under the following proprietary names:—

BP Trading Co. Ltd.
Silvapron—T
Burts and Harvey
BH 2, 4, 5-T 500

Herbicides

Mr. Nellist asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list, by proprietary brand, those phenoxy acid herbicides cleared for use in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Fenner: The phenoxyalkanoic acid herbicides form a large group of compounds which are characterised by plant growth regulatory/hormone type activity on most annual and perennial broadleaved species. Compounds from this group used in herbicides cleared under the pesticides safety precautions scheme are:

mcpa	2,4-D	2,4,5-T
mcpb	2,4-DB	fenoprop
mecoprop	2,4-DES	dichlorprop

Over 450 proprietary brands containing either these compounds alone, or in combination with each other or other compounds have commercial or provisional commercial clearance under the PSPS.

My Department publishes annually a list of all products cleared under the PSPS for agricultural, food storage, public hygiene, domestic and related uses in the United Kingdom in which the chemical active ingredient(s) of each product is shown. A copy is available in the Library of the House and I have sent a copy to the hon. Member.

Food Labelling

Sir John Farr asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has yet received the results of the survey of consumer understanding of food labelling which was commissioned in connection with the recommendations of the report of the Committee on the Medical Aspects of Food Policy on diet and cardiovascular disease.

Mrs. Fenner: Yes. The Government, the Consumers Association and the National Consumer Council collaborated in this survey with a view to assessing consumer understanding of and requirements for fat content and nutrition labelling. I have arranged for a summary of this work to be placed in the Library of the House. We shall be taking these results into account, alongside the views that have emerged from our consultations with all interested parties, in making proposals for implementing the labelling recommendations of the COMA report and in producing a revised version of the draft guidelines on nutrition labelling.

Rhizomania Disease

Sir Paul Hawkins asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further action he intends to take to prevent the risk of rhizomania disease becoming established in the United Kingdom.

Mr. MacGregor: My right hon. Friends the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, and the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales intend shortly to make a statutory order requiring all imports of seed potatoes to come from areas free from rhizomania. The disease attacks only beet plants but we need to avoid any possibility of its being carried by infected soil attached to imported seed potatoes. This new measure, which will come into operation in the autumn before the seed potato trade begins, represents an additional step in our defences against rhizomania.

I am pleased to say that the Dutch authorities have, in view of the United Kingdom's freedom from rhizomania, established a set of special arrangements to ensure that all exports of seed potatoes to the United Kingdom from the Netherlands come from land free from rhizomania. This voluntary arrangement will greatly assist the effective operation of the proposed order and will, in the meantime, enable contracts to be made for the coming season's trade in the knowledge that they will not run counter to the safeguards against rhizomania. I am also considering the possibility of measures to ensure that used agricultural machinery imported into the United Kingdom is free from any risk of rhizomania-infected soil.

Laboratories (Research Budgets)

Mr. Warren asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which laboratories within his Department, or within bodies for which he is responsible, have had their research budgets reduced in the current financial year; what is the financial value of the reduction; what is this figure expressed as a percentage of the total work carried out in the laboratory; and which of the laboratories for which he is responsible are being considered for privatisation.

Mr. Jopling [pursuant to his reply, 18 June 1985, c. 60]: The following reductions were made in the research budgets of my Department's laboratories as part of a reallocation of resources to make more funds available for research on food:

	£'000
Agricultural science laboratories	250
Central veterinary laboratory	130
Fisheries laboratories	160

These sums represent in each case approximately 1 per cent. of the total cost of the laboratories. There are no proposals to privatise any of my Department's laboratories.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Hairdressers

Mr. Alexander asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to introduce legislation to provide that a person owning a hairdressing salon or managing such a salon and in charge of training there must first be a registered hairdresser under the Hairdressers (Registration) Act 1964; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Entry into the hairdressing craft has traditionally been free. It is important to maximise competition, and I have no plans to introduce legislation concerning compulsory registration.

Textile Industry (Assistance)

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list in the Official Report the allocations made by his Department from the European regional development fund non-quota textile measures fund.

Mr. Trippier: The allocations to 31 May 1985 under the ERDF non-quota textile measures in England through Business Improvement Services are as follows:

	Number	Assistance Offered (£)
Greater Manchester/ Lancashire	345	1,959,294
West Yorkshire	205	1,248,366
Total	550	3,207,660

Interbuild '85 (Inward Mission)

Mr. Crowther asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry why an announcement was made on 17 May that the proposed inward mission of buyers to the Interbuild '85 exhibition would not be eligible for British Overseas Trade Board funding, when negotiations about the proposed mission had been taking place between the British Overseas Trade Board and overseas posts up to a few days previously.

Mr. Fletcher: The decision not to provide the British Overseas Trade Board support for the proposed inward mission to the Interbuild '85 exhibition was based not on eligibility but on the availability of funds.

The funds available to the BOTB for mounting inward missions in 1985-86 fell short of the amount that would be required to meet all the requests from industry. It was therefore necessary to establish a priority ranking amongst the various applications. Where appropriate, discussions with overseas posts continued during the priority review, in order that there should be no loss of momentum for the successful applications. In this particular case, however, BOTB was not involved in discussions with the overseas posts after the end of March. Overseas posts were not informed of the outcome of the priority review until the final decision on all the applications being considered had been taken and the relevant trade bodies had been told.

House of Fraser

Mr. Wrigglesworth asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assurances he received, and from whom, about the true beneficial ownership of the House of Fraser prior to taking his decision not to refer the Al Fayed bid to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Fletcher: As stated on 14 March, in considering whether a reference should be made the Secretary of State took into account the statements made and assurances given by the Al Fayed family about the offer, and the support given to those statements and assurances by Kleinwort Benson Ltd. The Al Fayed brothers stated throughout that they were acting as principals and independently in this matter. Kleinwort Benson stated publicly at the time of the offer that it was satisfied that the Al Fayed brothers were the beneficial owners of the Alfayed Investment and Trust (UK) Limited, the parent company of the company which acquired House of Fraser plc.

Mr. Wrigglesworth asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he was aware of the relationship between Mohammed Al Fayed and the Sultan of Brunei when he took the decision not to refer the Al Fayed bid for the House of Fraser to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Fletcher: Yes.

Debenhams Group (Takeover)

Sir Peter Mills asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he intends to refer the proposed takeover by the Burton/Habitat consortium of the Debenhams group to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Fletcher: My right hon. Friend will announce his decision as soon as practicable.

Takeovers and Members

Sir Peter Mills asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the implications for competition in the retailing industry of the current incidence of takeovers and mergers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: A number of mergers have arisen recently in the retailing sector. My right hon. Friend considers each case on its merits in accordance with the provisions of the Fair Trading Act 1973 and in the light of his policy of making references to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission primarily on competition grounds.

British Telecom

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his latest figure for the number of shareholders in British Telecom and for the number of shareholders who have sold their shares since the company's flotation.

Mr. Butcher: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police Cars (Equipment)

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the Association of Chief Police Officers concerning potential savings in cost arising from the fitting of the car pod system to police cars; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: None. Of six chief officers consulted about the value for money aspects of the system, only one expressed unconditional support.

Persons in Custody (Injuries)

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons held in custody in police stations in the Metropolitan area have inflicted wounds upon themselves using plastic cutlery issued with meals in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Prisoners (Dietary Requirements)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what specific arrangements are made to cater for the dietary requirements of prisoners (a) in prison and (b) while in custody undergoing trial, whose religion imposes restrictions on the foods they may eat; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what specific arrangements are made to cater for the dietary requirements of prisoners (a) in prison and (b) while in custody undergoing trial, whose religion imposes restrictions on the times at which they may eat; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Instructions issued to all establishments in 1983 on the treatment of inmates belonging to religious and other minorities included advice on the restrictions imposed by certain religions on the food which may be eaten and the times when it may be eaten. It is for individual establishments to determine the best way of catering for any special dietary needs of prisoners in their custody, both whilst they are in prison and when they are produced at court for trial, in the light of current instructions and local circumstances.

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what provisions are made for food for those with special diet needs due to religious custom whilst they are attending courts in the custody of prison officers.

Mr. Mellor: Governors are required to ensure that prisoners produced at court are provided with sufficient food at reasonable hours. Instructions have been issued to governors on the dietary requirements of prisoners belonging to particular religions. It is for individual establishments to determine the best way of meeting any special dietary needs of prisoners attending court in the light of those instructions and local circumstances.

Mr. Parvaiz Khan

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, pursuant to the answer of 11 June, Official Report, column 390, regarding the circumstances in which Mr. Parvaiz Khan was injured on 22 May at the Old Bailey, he will write to the hon. Member for Leyton about the outcome when the police investigation has been concluded, including a statement of the action proposed in the light of the results of the investigation.

Mr. Mellor: Yes.

Coal Industry Dispute

Mr. Redmond asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many complaints were made against the police during the mining dispute; how many cases have been considered to date; and, of these, in how many cases the complaint has been upheld and in how many cases it was not upheld.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Five hundred and forty-nine complaints against the police arising from the miners' strike have been recorded under section 49 of the Police Complaints Board and, since 19 April, its successor, the Police Complaints Authority, had, up until 19 June, considered the outcome of 135 completed complaint investigations arising from the dispute. No discipline charges have been preferred as a result of these complaints, although advice has been given to the officers involved in four cases.

Prisons

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what unused capacity there was at Ranby and Preston prisons for category C prisoners on 6 June.

Mr. Mellor: On 7 June, the nearest date for which figures are available. Ranby had five vacancies for category C prisoners. The population of Preston exceeded its certified normal accommodation by 163.

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when Stocken prison will come into use; and what categories of prisoners will be sent there.

Mr. Mellor: In late July for category C prisoners mainly from the midlands.

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department with whom he consults before making decisions about the future of prisons.

Mr. Mellor: This depends on a number of factors, including the nature of the proposed change and whether planning consent is required from the local authority.

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the capacity of B wing at Hull prison for juveniles; how many juveniles it is proposed will be transferred there under the plans set out in his answer of 5 June, Official Report, columns 157-58; and from where they will come.

Mr. Mellor: B wing at Hull has a certified normal accommodation of 102. It would take all the juveniles currently committed to Thorp Arch, of whom on 19 June there were 61.

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria are used for the reclassification of category B prisoners into category C; and how many such reclassifications there have been in Leeds and Hull prisons in each of the last five years.

Mr. Mellor: The downgrading of prisoners from one security category to another is conducted on the basis of individual assessments applying the same standards as for the original categorisation. New factors, such as greater maturity, may also be taken into account.

The number of prisoners recategorised at Leeds and Hull during the past five years is not recorded centrally.

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many young persons on remand or awaiting allocation were held in each of Leeds and Hull prisons on 31 January 1985 and 11 June 1985, respectively.

Mr. Mellor: On 31 January, Leeds held 197 unsentenced and 85 sentenced prisoners aged under 21. On 14 June, the nearest date for which figures are available centrally, it held 152 unsentenced and 156 sentenced prisoners aged under 21.

Hull does not at present hold young offenders.

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many category C prisoners were in Leeds and Hull prisons, showing the figures separately, on (a) 30 November 1984, (b) 31 January 1985, (c) 31 March 1985, (d) 31 May 1985 and (e) 11 June 1985, respectively.

Mr. Mellor: The information available centrally is shown in the following table:

Date	Number of Category C prisoners
	Leeds	Hull
5 November 1984	286	24
5 February 1985	212	28
3 May 1985	298	40

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current population at Morton Hall prison.

Mr. Mellor: One hundred and twenty seven on 21 June.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department from which prisons the prisoners at Morton Hall prison have been transferred; and how many were from each establishment.

Mr. Mellor: The first 50 were transferred from Ashwell, Sudbury and Ranby; the remainder have been allocated from the local prisons at Leicester, Lincoln and Birmingham and from other training prisons following recategorisation. The exact numbers are not held centrally.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current staffing level at Morton Hall prison.

Mr. Mellor: The staffing level varies according to the level of prison activity at different times of the day or week. At its busiest, the highest number of staff on duty in all grades would be about 45. The overall total of staff employed on 21 June, including night patrols and 10 part-time education staff, some of whom attend in the evenings only, was 59.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department from which prisons staff have been withdrawn in order to staff Morton Hall prison; and how many were from each establishment.

Mr. Mellor: The staff needed are being provided either by recruitment or by transfer or detached duty from other establishments. The other prison department establishments affected by detached duty may change from time to time, but on 21 June the position was that there were 16 full-time permanent staff, including the governor who has been transferred from Wellingborough, and 10 part-time permanent teaching staff. There were 33 staff in all grades on detached duty from other establishments as listed:

	Number
Ashwell	2
Aylesbury	1
Birmingham	4
Gartree	2
Glen Parva	2
Hewell Grange	2
Lincoln	2
Lowdham Grange	3
Onley	2
Ranby	1
Shrewsbury	1
Stafford	2
Stocken	3
Sudbury	2
Swinfen Hall	1
Whatton	3

Lincoln Prison

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the certified normal accommodation in Lincoln prison;

(2) what is the current population of Lincoln prison.

Mr. Mellor: On 21 June, the certified normal accommodation of Lincoln was 345 and the population was 637.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to relieve the overcrowding at Lincoln prison.

Mr. Mellor: The reopening of Morton hall has already provided some relief. Next month a new category C training prison will open at Stocken in Leicestershire; this will allow some newly sentenced men at Lincoln to be allocated a training place more quickly.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average length of time that remand prisoners are held in Her Majesty's prison, Holloway.

Mr. Mellor: Information on the average time spent on remand in individual establishments is not recorded centrally and could be calculated only at disproportionate cost. The latest available information about the average time spent in custody by all untried and by all convicted but unsentenced female prisoners is published annually in "Prison Statistics, England and Wales" (Table 2(g) of the latest volume—1983, Cmnd. 9363).

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the total availability of education time for the prisoners at Her Majesty's prison, Holloway, over the past four years.

Mr. Mellor: The available information for the period 1 January 1984 to 21 June 1985 is as follows:

	Teaching Hours
	Planned		Withdrawn
	Daytime	Evening	Daytime	Evening
Holloway	13,544	2,958	6,072	2,093

Interruptions to the planned programmes were caused primarily by shortages of prison officers for supervisory duties. Information for earlier periods is not readily available.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the average amount of time spent by officers at Her Majesty's prison, Holloway, on escort duties over the past four years.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. But a special examination of escort duty commitments at Holloway prison revealed that, for the quarter ended 30 September 1984, the average number of hours per officer per week spent on escort duties was just under 10.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the average amount of association time for prisoners at Her Majesty's prison, Holloway, during each month of the last four years.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what have been the total number of medical staff employed at Her Majesty's prison, Holloway (a) in the current year and (b) for each of the past four years.

Mr. Mellor: The medical staff employed at Her Majesty's prison, Holloway was as follows:

	1985	1984	1983	1982	1981
Doctors	4	4	4	4	4
Nursing staff	65	67	66	65	66

In addition, a substantial number of specialists visit on a regular basis usually for two or more sessions a week at present. Details are not available for these arrangements in previous years.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the average number of staff, of all grades, at Her Majesty's prison, Holloway, for each year since 1978 and the average number of prisoners there for each year over the same period.

Mr. Mellor The figures requested are as follows:

Year ended	Average number of staff in post	Average inmate population
31 December 1978	346	359
31 December 1979	350	363
31 December 1980	364	355
31 December 1981	372	331
31 December 1982	436	315
31 December 1983	448	332
31 December 1984	467	335
1 January 1985 to 31 May 1985	488	337

Great Windmill Street (Bomb)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the origin of the TNT in the bomb at Great Windmill street, Soho, on Saturday 15 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Police inquiries into the origin of the explosives are continuing, and I am not yet in a position to make a statement.

Passports

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will explain the basis on which a joint passport is not usable by both husband and wife separately if either one travels abroad alone.

Mr. Waddington: The term "joint passport" is a misnomer for a family passport, issued to either a husband or a wife to enable the family to travel on one passport, thus saving the expense of obtaining separate passports. Only the person in whose name the passport is issued may use it when travelling alone. To allow the spouse of the holder to use it independently would be contrary to international passport usage.

Prisoners (Escapes)

Mr. Dickens asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will issue guidelines to Her Majesty's prison governors and chief constables regarding the promptness and accuracy of information to be given to the public when escapes from custody occur involving prisoners with convictions for offences which may render them a danger to the public.

Mr. Mellor: Prison governors are required to report escapes promptly to the police, and Home Office public relations branch notifies the Press Association. Similar arrangements for reporting to the police apply to failure to return from home leave, but we are reviewing the possible need for further instructions to prison governors. The police have their own arrangements for disseminating information. Appropriate action is a matter for their operational judgment in the light of the circumstances of the particular case. I do not think it would be practicable or appropriate to attempt to lay down guidelines.

Peacock Committee

Mr. Buchan asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now publish the names of the persons and organisations invited to submit evidence to the Peacock committee on the financing of the British Broadcasting Corporation.

Mr. Giles Shaw: It is for the committee itself to decide how to conduct its affairs, and whether to disclose the particular persons or organisations from whom it has invited evidence. The committee has made it known through the press that it will be pleased to receive, by 31 August, written evidence from any person or body on matters which are germane to its review.

Prisoners (Remission)

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether an offender sentenced to be detained for a determinate number of years by virtue of section 53(2) of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933, and detained in prison at the direction of the Secretary of State, is entitled to remission of any part of that sentence under the prison rules.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave in reply to his question on 23 May at column 570.

York (Incident)

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of north Yorkshire about the civil disturbances and criminal activity that took place in York on Saturday 15 June; if he will ask the chief constable to report on the extent to which the incidents originated from coach passengers and on the extent to which alcoholic drink contributed to these disturbances; and if he will make a statement on the substance of the report.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the chief constable of north Yorkshire that on the evening of Saturday 15 June 43 coachloads of visitors who had attended York races earlier in the day travelled into the city centre, where many spent the evening drinking. In the course of the evening there were a number of disturbances and 41 arrests were made, including 18 for drunkenness and others for breach of the peace, obstruction, theft and assault. Nine people were cautioned and criminal proceedings are pending in the other cases. Three police officers sustained injuries which required hospital treatment. It is not known how many of those arrested were members of coach parties, but 31 of them gave addresses outside the north Yorkshire police area. The number of arrests was more than twice the average for a Saturday evening in York.

Drugs (Prosecutions)

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of prosecutions for (i) possession and (ii) supply of the drugs (a) heroin, (b) cocaine, (c) cannabis, (d) amphetamines and (e) L.S.D. for the years 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984, respectively.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested for 1980 to 1983 is given in the following table; information for 1984 is not yet available.

Persons proceeded against for certain offences under the Misuse of Drugs Act, 1971

United Kingdom 1980-83	Number of persons
*Type of drug and type of offence	1980	1981	1982	1983

Unlawful supply	37	34	72	43

* As the same person may be proceeded against for more than one offence or for more than one type of drug, the rows cannot be added together to produce totals.

Stonehenge (Police Operation)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Wiltshire as to the total cost of the police operation at the 1985 summer solstice festival at Stonehenge; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Wiltshire as to the number of police deployed at Rolston camp, Larkhill, Wiltshire, during the night of 15 May; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The chief constable will be sending me a report once his operational commitment at Stonehenge is ended, and I shall then write to the hon. Member.

Metropolitan Police (Rent Allowances)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state the total sums paid in rent allowances to Metropolitan police officers in each year since 1979, broken down into payments made to subsidise rents and payments made to subsidise mortgage payments.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that total payments of rent allowance and compensatory grant to officers of the Metropolitan police who are not provided with police accommodation during the financial years 1979-80 to 1984-85 were as follows:

Total Metropolitan Police rent allowance and compensatory grant payments, 1979-80 to 1984-85 (£ million)

	Rent allowance	Compensatory grant
1979-80	18·106	7·441
1980-81	18·895	7·866
1981-82	27·805	8·305
1982-83	28·225	11·433
1983-84	35·469	12·628
1984-85	37·140	15·883

Records are not kept showing whether officers used these payments to pay rent or to meet mortgage commitments.

Drug Addicts

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the totals of the registered number of addicts in England and Wales addicted to (a) heroin and (b) cocaine, broken down by regional health authority areas for the years 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984, respectively.

Mr. Mellor: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of registered drug addicts in Slough.

Mr. Mellor: The available information relates to notified drug addicts in the whole of the Thames Valley police force area and was given in the reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Mr. Wheeler) on 11 June 1985 at columns 394-95.

Extradition (USA)

Mr. Hanley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has proposals for amending the United Kingdom's extradition treaty with the United States of America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brittan: Agreement has been reached with the United States Government on a supplementary treaty to the United Kingdom/United States extradition treaty for which, in due course, the United States Senate's advice and consent to ratification will be sought and an order under the Suppression of Terrorism Act laid before Parliament for approval. The effect of the supplementary treaty would be to deny fugitives accused or convicted of certain serious offences of violence the ability to avoid extradition on the grounds that their offences were political. Both Governments believe that the present political offence exception to extradition, as it applies to violent offences, is not suitable to extraditon arrangements between two democratic countries sharing the same high regard for the fundamental principles of justice and operating similar independent judicial systems. The supplementary treaty would represent a most significant contribution to the efforts now being made by Western democracies to counter the threat posed by international terrorism. It is also intended to make some further, minor amendments to the present treaty.

WALES

NHS (Private Patients)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for each year since 1979 the total amount Welsh health authorities have written off as bad debts because of private patients not paying their bills.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This information has not been collected centrally, but we have arranged for it to be included in the annual accounts of health authorities from 1985-86.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for Wales and for each year since 1979 the income received from private patients in National Health Service hospitals (a) in gross terms, (b) revalued by the retail price index and (c) revalued by the National Health Service pay and prices index.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information requested is shown in the following table:

	Gross income Wales	Revalued by retail price index	Revalued by NHS pay and prices index
1979-80	323	469	500
1980-81	441	551	535
1981-82	494	554	553
1982-83	478	500	502
1983-84	598	598	598

Labour Statistics

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report for each travel-to-work area in Wales for the most recently available date (a) the number of unemployed claimants aged 18 years and under who have never had a job since leaving school and (b) the percentage that (a) forms of the estimated population of this age group.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Numbers of unemployed claimants aged 18 years and under who have never been in employment are available from the computer in the House of Commons Library.

It is not possible to express these as a percentage of the population in the way requested. Estimates of population are not broken down from county to travel-to-work area level.

NHS (Staff)

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many medical laboratory scientific officers are employed by the National Health Service in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: At 30 September 1984, there were 879 (whole-time equivalent) medical laboratory scientific officers employed in the NHS in Wales.

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many principal medical laboratory scientific officers are employed by the National Health Service in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: At 30 September 1984, there were three full-time principal medical laboratory scientific officers employed in the NHS in Wales.

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many physicists, bio-chemists and clinical psychologists are employed by the National Health Service in Wales; and, of each group, how many are in the top grade.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information, which refers to 30 September 1984, is as follows:

	Physicists	Bio-chemists	Clinical Psychologists
Whole-time equivalents	30	64	83
Of which in the top grade (all full-time)	2	6	2

DEFENCE

NATO Base, Stornoway

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total expenditure to date on phase one of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation base at Stornoway.

Mr. Lee: Expenditure on phase I is provisionally estimated to have been £8·9 million.

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Defence when the outcome of the review of the options at the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation base in Stornoway, referred to in his answer of 28 March 1985, Official Report, column 321, will be announced; whether it will involve on site inspections at the airport and around Broad bay; and whether the Stornoway airport sub-committee of the Western Islands council will be present.

Mr. Lee: The review is likely to be completed early next year. It will include a feasibility study to be undertaken by a commercial consultant who will require to conduct on site inspections and to discuss proposed resupply options with the Western Isles islands council.

Trident Submarines (Communications)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated cost of building and running an extremely low frequency station in Scotland for communications with Trident submarines and for control over their missiles.

Mr. Butler: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the replies given on 17 April 1985, at columns 209-11, to the right hon. Member for the Western Isles (Mr. Stewart).

Communications Systems

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence where, in the Statement on the Defence Estimates, the cost of the extra low frequency communications systems and connected research appears.

Mr. Butler: Consideration of ELF communications is currently at the research stage. Expenditure on this is included in the figures which appear in table 3.2 of volume 2 of the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1985.

United States Chief of Staff (Visit)

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the purpose of the recent visit to the United Kingdom of the chief of staff of the United States army; and whether discussions were held with his Department on the subjects of AirLand Battle, and the AirLand Battle 2000/Focus 21 studies.

Mr. Stanley: The recent visit of the chief of staff of the United States army was at the invitation of the chief of the general staff. The purpose of the visit was to discuss matters of mutual concern and to enable him to visit elements of the British army. Details of the discussions are confidential.

Sales

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total value of sales of military vehicles and equipment for each year since 1978.

Mr. Butler: It is not possible to identify figures separately for military vehicles. However, the total values of arms sales overseas in the years requested, up to the latest year for which information is available, are as follows:

Year	Identified Defence Equipment* £ million	†Estimates of Additional Military Equipment £ million
1978	588	1,017
1979	551	957
1980	693	1,290
1981	725	1,341
1982	988	1,268
1983	919	1,189

* Categories of equipment which can be identified through the Customs and Excise tariff.

† These goods are not distinguishable from similar goods for civilian purposes in Customs and Excise records. These estimates are based on information from the Society of British Aerospace Companies and individual electronics and motor vehicle manufacturing companies. Exports connected with international collaborative projects are excluded.

Note: Figures are expressed in 1983 constant prices.

Aldermaston and Dounreay

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the main purposes to which (a) the proposed new plutonium factory at Aldermaston and (b) the new prototype pressurised water propulsion reactor at Dounreay are intended to be put.

Mr. Butler: The new capital facilities at AWRE Aldermaston to which the question refers will replace existing facilities for processing nuclear materials in order to maintain the British nuclear warhead programme and to ensure the achievement of essential health and safety standards.

Pressurised water reactors are used for all seagoing nuclear power plants. The new prototype pressurised water propulsion reactor, known as PWR2, is the second generation reactor. It will be used to power the Trident submarines and the next generation of nuclear powered hunter killer submarines. The prototype recently installed at Dounreay will be used for development tests and trials.

Optical Equipment

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current value of his Department's order for optical equipment for the armed forces.

Mr. Butler: I shall answer shortly.

Dockyards

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if costings of agency management and other options for the royal dockyards have been prepared in accordance with Her Majesty's Government's guidelines on privatisation, dated September 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butler: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the document "Transferring Work out of Government Departments," prepared by Her Majesty's Treasury in May 1983 and subsequently released to the trades unions and others, and which was produced for the guidance of Departments in assessing the cost implications of such proposals. The guidance, which is necessarily of general applicability, has been taken into account in considering options for the future management of the dockyards.

PRIME MINISTER

Heroin

Mr. Alton asked the Prime Minister what criteria she will use to judge the success or failure of the current Government campaign against heroin; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The campaign is designed to improve knowledge about the effects of using heroin and to increase young people's resistance to trying it.

My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-secretary of State for Health and Social Security has commissioned Research Bureau Ltd. to undertake an evaluation of the campaign. It interviewed 700 teenagers and 400 parents in February 1985 to establish a baseline for the research and will be repeating the interviews with different groups of the same size in October 1985 and February 1986. This will enable us to judge the effects of the campaign on young people's attitudes to heroin and their knowledge about its effects.

Endangered Species

Dr. David Clark asked the Prime Minister who represents the United Kingdom upon the committee meeting under the European Community convention on international trade in endangered species regulations; if she will detail the subjects covered by the agenda of each of the meetings; and if she will indicate those items on which no discussions took place.

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom is normally represented on this committee by officials from the Department of the Environment and Her Majesty's Customs and Excise. Representatives from the United KIngdom CITES scientific authorities, the Nature Conservancy council (for animals) or the Royal Botanic Gardens (for plants) also attend where necessary.

The proceedings of this committee are confidential and I have nothing to add to the answer which the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment gave on 3 June at columns 43-44.

Sri Lanka (Export Credit and Aid)

Mr. Gould asked the Prime Minisster if she will ensure that a decision on the export credit and aid package which will secure for British contractors the contract for the Samanala Wewa hydro-electric project in Sri Lanka is reached as soon as possible.

The Prime Minister: The Government are pursuing the issues involved, and will take a decision shortly.

Taxation and National Insurance

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop asked the Prime Minster in the tax year commencing 5 April 1985, how much (a) a single person and (b) a wife with a working husband, can earn without becoming liable to pay-as-you-earn or national insurance charges; and why the two thresholds do not incide.

The Prime Minister: A single person and a wife with a working husband can both earn up to £2,205 per year (equivalent to £42·40p per week) before becoming liable to income tax and £35·50p per week before becoming liable to national insurance contributions in the 1985-86 tax year. The starting points differ because the payments have different purposes. National insurance contributions finance specific benefits and payments carry wih them rights to such benefits. The starting point is set at a level that will enable the great majority of employees to build up benefit rights. Income tax is levied to finance general Government expenditure and the Government's aim is to increase the theshold and take the lowest paid out of tax. Income tax thresholds are 20 per cent. higher in real terms than they were in 1978-79.

House of Fraser

Mr. Wrigglesworth asked the Prime Minister, if she is satisfied with the co-ordination between the Department of Trade and Industry and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office before a decision was reached not to refer the Al Fayed bid for the House of Fraser to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

The Prime Minister: Yes.

Privatisation

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Prime Minister if she will list those public sector companies and operations which are to be sold in part or in whole in the financial years (a) 1985-86, (b) 1986-87 and (c) 1987-88.

The Prime Minister: It is not the Government's practice to disclose future special sales of assets for individual years because advance details may be commercially sensitive and may depend also on decisions yet to be taken, and market conditions. Forecast receipts from special sales of assets are set out each year in the public expenditure White Paper and in the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Autumn Statement.

Tamils

Mr. Corbyn asked the Prime Minister if, during her discussions with the President of Sri Lanka in April, the question of Tamils seeking asylum in the United Kingdom was discussed; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No. I hope that the recent discussions between the Sri Lankan and Indian Governments and the ceasefire announced on 18 June will lead to the rapid resumption of efforts to achieve a negotiated settlement to the inter-communal dispute in Sri Lanka. Such a settlement, recognising the rights and interests of all communities, is the only way to end the violence which all have suffered.

ENERGY

British Gas

14. Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on his intentions for gas showrooms arising from his plans to privatise British Gas.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: As my right hon. Friend made clear in his statement on 7 May we intend to transfer to the new private sector company all the assets of the British Gas Corporation.

Exploration Licences

16. Mr. Forth asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many different companies will operate exploration licences following the recent ninth round of allocations; and how many of those companies will be acting as operators for the first time.

20. Mr. Hayward asked the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received from smaller oil companies following the announcement of the ninth round of licence allocations.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The ninth round involved production licences. Thirty one companies received one or more awards as operator, three for the first time. Awards have been discussed at a number of meetings between Ministers and officials of this Department and individual oil companies. Generally, small companies did well.

Annexe B Applications

17. Mr. Hind asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many annexe B applications have been received in the past 12 months; and how these figures compare with those of the previous five years.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: I approved 15 projects in 1984. A further six have been approved so far this year. Approvals for the previous five years are as follows:

	Number
1979	4
1980	3
1981	0
1982	3
1983	10

Sizewell Inquiry

18. Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the latest estimate of the administrative costs of the Sizewell inquiry.

Mr. Goodlad: The final cost of the inquiry will become evident only when the inspector has completed his report. However, costs up to 31 May 1985 either falling to my Department or recoverable from the CEGB total approximately £2,722,000.

Home Insulation

19. Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Energy what steps his Department is taking to promote improved home insulation against energy loss.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department's energy efficiency office draws householders' attention to the benefits of energy efficiency and informs them how to realise these benefits. It has also supported the expansion of voluntary sector insulation projects by over 100 per cent. since November 1983 and has supported the development of home energy auditing schemes.

Energy Conservation

21. Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he will next meet the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board to discuss energy conservation.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have regular meetings with the chairman of the CEGB at which a wide range of matters are discussed.

Opencast Mining

22. Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Energy what was the volume of coal produced in the United Kingdom in 1984 by opencast method; what was the net profit contributed by the Opencast Executive in 1984; and whether he has had discussions with the chairman of the National Coal Board regarding future levels of output.

Mr. David Hunt: Figures showing the performance of the opencast sector in 1984 will be available in the annual report and accounts of the National Coal Board, to be published shortly. The board's output levels feature in my regular discussions with the chairman.

Energy Efficiency Office

23. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will report the progress to date made by his energy efficiency office.

Mr. Peter Walker: I am delighted that all the indicators show that our energy efficiency campaign is a great success.

Energy savings under the energy efficiency demonstration scheme have shown an increase of 33 per cent;

Applications for extended energy survey grants have nearly doubled;

Over 100,000 homes have now been treated under the voluntary insulation projects scheme;

Provisional figures would appear to indicate that over the past year improvements in energy efficiency in Britain compare very favourably with those in many of our main industrial competitors.

Offshore Oil Industry (Capital Equipment)

24. Mr. Dickens asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the approximate United Kingdom manufactured content of capital equipment supplied to the United Kingdom offshore oil industry in the past year.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The approximate United Kingdom manufactured content of capital equipment supplied to the United Kingdom offshore oil industry in the past year was worth £1·5 billion out of a total of £2 billion.

Nuclear Power Stations (Safety)

25. Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has received any recent representations on safety at nuclear power stations.

Mr. Goodlad: I receive representations from time to time on all aspects of nuclear power, including safety-related issues.

Opencast Mining

26. Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he next expects to meet representatives of the licensed opencast operators to discuss the system of licensing.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department is in regular contact with the National Association of Licensed Opencast Operators.

South Midlands Coalfield

27. Mrs. Currie asked the Secretary of State for Energy if when he next meets the chairman of the National Coal Board, he will discuss the development of the south midlands coalfield.

Mr. David Hunt: There are exciting prospects for the coal industry in the south midlands area, which I expect to discuss with the chairman of the National Coal Board.

Dismissed Miners

28. Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions he has had with the chairman of the National Coal Board about miners dismissed during the recent industrial dispute; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer to the reply I gave earlier today to the right hon. Member for Salford, East (Mr. Orme).

Magnox Power Stations

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish a list of Magnox nuclear power stations showing for each (a) the date commissioned, (b) the most recent date of shut down for examination, inspection, maintenance and testing under the terms of its nuclear site licence; and (c) the year in which he expects it to be decommissioned.

Mr. Goodlad: The date of commissioning and the most recent date of shutdown for examination, inspection, maintenance and testing under the terms of each nuclear site licence for each Magnox station is as follows:

	End of Commissioning Date	Most Recent Date of Statutory Shutdown
Calder Hall	April 1959	May 1985	(Reactor 4)
Berkeley	October 1962	February 1984	(Reactor 1)
Bradwell	December 1962	August 1984	(Reactor 2)
Hinkley Point A	May 1965	September 1984	(Reactor 2)
Trawsfyndd	May 1965	October 1984	(Reactor 2)
Dungeness A	December 1965	June 1984	(Reactor 1)
Sizewell A	September 1966	June 1984	(Reactor 1)
Oldbury	September 1968	July 1984	(Reactor 1)
Wylfa	March 1973	May 1984	(Reactor 2)

No decommissioning date for any Magnox station has yet been determined.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland has responsibility for the Scottish Sites.

Coal Industry (Redundancies)

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many employees of the National Coal Board have accepted reduncancy or will enter early retirement; and how many have otherwise left the industry since 1 January 1985.

Mr. David Hunt: I understand from the National Coal Board that between 1 January 1985 and 8 June 1985 the numbers of men on colliery books leaving the industry have been as follows:

	Number
voluntary redundancy	6,134
other voluntary causes	1,321
early retirement	302
other involuntary causes	1,539

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) whether he has any conveniently available information as to how many of the miners who have taken redundancy have found alternative employment;

(2) whether he has any conveniently available information as to how many of the 43,102 miners who have taken redundancy have found alternative employment.

Mr. David Hunt: No, nor do I know where the figure of 43,102 comes from. It must be a figure covering a number of past years.

Coal Imports

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Energy how much domestic coal is being imported into the United Kingdom from South Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Imports of anthracite into the United Kingdom from South Africa were 104,000 tonnes in 1984 and 93,000 tonnes to the end of April 1985.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Energy how much domestic coal has been imported into England and Wales in each of the past three months.

Mr. David Hunt: Latest monthly figures for imports of anthracite into England and Wales are shown below:

	1985
	February	March	April
Anthracite imports into England and Wales. (Tonnes)	70,000	101,000	80,000

Onshore Oil Exploration

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has as to whether any oil exploration is taking place in Warwickshire or adjoining counties.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: Warwickshire has relatively little of its area under licence. There are four licences which cover parts of the county and a further six licences covering immediately neighbouring areas of adjoining counties. Since January 1984 I have been notified of three seismic survey programmes under these licences, two of which have been completed and one which is planned to start in July. Two exploration wells in a neighbouring county have been drilled.

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the areas from which he has received representations about alleged coincidence between the presence of a Central Electricity Generating Board or United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority nuclear establishment and above average rates of cancer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: I understand that allegations have been made about a number of AEA and CEGB sites. There is no medical evidence to suggest that cancer rates in the vicinity of AEA and CEGB nuclear installations are higher than those in other parts of the country. I deeply deplore the claims that have been made to the contrary and the unnecessary anxiety that they have caused.

ENVIRONMENT

Compulsory Purchase Orders

Mr. Mikardo asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many compulsory purchase orders were made by local authorities in England under part V of the Housing Act 1957 in each of the years 1982, 1983 and 1984; how many such orders have been recommended to be confirmed by a statutory inspector as a result of a public inquiry; and in how many instances he or his predecessors have decided not to accept the inspector's recommendation to confirm the order.

Sir George Young: Compulsory purchase orders under part V of the 1957 Act submitted to the Department and decisions issued are as follows:

Made and submitted	79	76	137
Recommended for confirmation following inquiry	22	18	44
Not confirmed, contrary to recommendation	0	1	2

Houses (Mortgages)

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received any assurances from building societies that houses of the categories specified in the Housing Defects Act, but which are free from structural defects, will now be regarded as mortgageable.

Mr. Gow: Although prefabricated reinforced concrete dwellings of the types designated by my right hon. Friend under the Act may not show any visible evidence of defects, the Building Research Establishment has advised that they are all likely to require major structural repair within the period of further life normally required by building societies of a property taken as security for a mortgage loan. Those who have purchased such dwellings are eligible for assistance under the Housing Defects Act 1984 provided that they bought before the cut-off date which applies to their type of property and provided the dwellings were orginally sold by the public sector.

The Building Societies Association has participated in arrangements made by the National House-Building Council for the approval of repair systems and an associated warrantly for these houses. I am confident that building societies generally will lend on houses repaired using such approved systems.

Homes (Rewiring)

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what forms of financial assistance Her Majesty's Government make available to pensioners rewiring their homes.

Sir George Young: There is no financial assistance specifically for this purpose. In certain circumstances, local authorities are able to make payments under the home improvement grant system which are eligible for Exchequer contributions. Those entitled to supplementary benefit may be eligible for help from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services.

The recent Green Paper (Cmnd. 9513) proposes that help would be available for the first time, in the form of equity-sharing loans, for rewiring an otherwise satisfactory property.

Private Medical Facilities (Rateable Values)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the total rateable value in each rating authority in England and Wales, of private medical facilities, exclusive of surgeries, on 1 April 1984.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have today placed the information in the Library.

Radioactivity

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the 20 areas in England and Wales with the lowest levels of naturally occurring radioactivity.

Mr. Waldegrave: According to information supplied by the National Radiological Protection Board, the 20 sites in England and Wales which show the lowest gamma radiation dose rate due to naturally occurring radioactivity present in the ground are as follows:

National Grid 10km square	Dose Rate Micrograys/ year	Location	County
SZ08	30	Studland, Nr. Swanage	Dorset
TQ01	30	Amberley, North of Arundel	West Sussex
SU10	40	Ashley Heath, West of Ringwood	Dorset
SU58	50	South of Aston Tirrold, South West of Wallingford	Oxfordshire
TM34	50	Near Shottisham, North of Felixstowe	Suffolk
SE00	50	Saddleworth Moor, West of Oldham	Greater Manchester
SU30	50	Near Balmer Lawn, Near Brockenhurst	Hampshire
SZ69	60	Nettlestone Point, Isle of Wight	Hampshire
TM35	70	Near Bromeswell, North East of Ipswich	Suffolk
SZ68	70	Culver Cliff, Isle of Wight	Hampshire
TM45	70	Near Aldeburgh	Suffolk
SU85	70	Near Fleet	Hampshire
SE74	70	Near Bamby Moor, East of York	Humberside
SZ79	70	West Wittering, South West of Chichester	West Sussex
TL56	80	Near Swaffham Prior, West of Newmarket	Cambridgeshire
SU20	80	New Forest, Northwest of Brockenhurst	Hampshire
TL34	80	Royston	Hertfordshire
SZ19	80	Near Hurn, North of Bournemouth	Dorset
SK00	80	Brownhills, Northeast of Wolverhampton	West Midlands
SU31	90	New Forest, East of Brockenhurst	Hampshire

Private Nursing Homes (Rate Relief)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has for each year since 1970 as to the total amount of public money going into private nursing homes through rate relief.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: This information is not collected centrally.

Endangered Species

Mr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the decisions taken by the committee meeting under the European Community convention on international trade in endangered species regulations; and what formal or informal agreements have been reached by the committee on any other matters.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 3 June at columns 43-44.

Housing Defects Act

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library copies of the bids for additional allocations under the Housing Defects Act from local authorities listed in his answer of 3 June, Official Report, columns 40-42.

Mr. Gow: Copies of bids for additional allocations received from 114 local authorities in England have been placed in the Library.

Bed and Breakfast Accommodation

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many households with dependent children are currently being housed by local authorities in bed and breakfast accommodation.

Mr. Gow: At the end of December 1984, the latest date for which information is available, it is estimated that there were some 3,300 households in England which had been accepted as homeless by local authorities and were being housed in bed and breakfast accommodation. Information on the characteristics of households in bed and breakfast accommodation is not collected by my Department.

Nature Conservancy Council

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many persons are employed by the Nature Conservancy Council; and whether there are plans to increase the number.

Mr. Waldegrave: Staff in post at the Nature Conservancy Council on 1 June totalled 586. The NCC is currently recruiting within its increased complement of 696. Its case for any further increase is being looked at in the context of its corporate plan.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the total costs of the setting-up of London Docklands Development Corporation area offices in (a) Southwark and (b) Silvertown.

Sir George Young: The costs are some £245,000 for Southwark and £275,000 at the Royal Victoria Dock. Much of this cost will be recovered in due course.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the total cost of the London Docklands Development Corporation's re-location of offices from the Isle of Dogs to the Royal Victoria dock.

Sir George Young: A disused building at Gallion's Reach near the Albert Basin has been refurbished to house the headquarters staff relocated from the Isle of Dogs at a cost of about £220,000, including the installation of telecommunications equipment.

This operation will free valuable premises in the enterprise zone on the Isle of Dogs.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much has been spent by the London Docklands Development Corporation on hospitality, public relations and personal expenses during each of the past three financial years.

Sir George Young: The information is as follows:

1982-83	119,000
1983-84	153,000
1984-85	196,000

Local Government Reform

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will name the borough councils which have made representations to him regarding transitional costs and state the nature of the representations made.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: My right hon. Friend has received formal representations from the London boroughs of Hammersmith and Fulham and Sutton for disregards, under section 8(4) of the Local Government Finance Act 1982, relating to preparation for the abolition of the Greater London council. Members and officials of other boroughs have raised similar matters less formally.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the criteria he will adopt for appointing the best men or women for the job of shadow chairmen of residuary bodies; and who takes the final responsibility for such appointments.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have already done so on 5 June at columns 163-65.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to set the upper limit of expenses for the preparatory committees of successor authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: No.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to inform the House of those individuals who have accepted membership of preparatory committees of successor authorities.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Members of preparatory committees will be appointed by successor authorities. My right hon. Friend will have no interest in this matter.

Thames Water Authority

Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to publish the practical model for the privatisation of the Thames water authority submitted to him by the authority.

Mr. Macfarlane: I shall put in the Library of the House a copy of the document on the privatisation of water authorities which I have had from the chairman of the Thames water authority.

Teachers and Police (Salaries)

Mr. Hicks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received advocating that teacher and police salaries should be transferred from being the responsibility of local government to being that of central Government.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: My right hon. Friend has received no recent formal representations, but the suggestion that payment of teachers' salaries should become a central Government responsibility has often been made.

Local Authorities (Rates)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the councils against which his Department intends to institute legal proceedings for not complying with his requirement to set a rate.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have no power to compel local authorities to comply with their statutory duty under the General Rate Act 1967 to make a proper rate.

SCOTLAND

Power Lines (Skye)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with the North of Scotland Hydro Electric Board about the proposed electricity power lines running over Skye, as part of the scheme to supply the outer islands with mainland electricity; and if such lines will require planning approval.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I have not discussed the proposed lines across Skye with the hydro board. The board would require the consent of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland under section 10*(b)* of the schedule to the Electric Lighting (Clauses) Act 1899 for the erection of such a line and no such application has yet been received. Prior consultation with the planning authority is required by statute and the Secretary of State's approval would carry permitted development status under the Town and Country Planning (General Development) (Scotland) Order 1981.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with the North of Scotland Hydro Electric Board about alternative means of supplying electricity to the outer isles, which do not involve power lines going over Skye; and what are the expected energy needs of the outer isles.

Mr. Allan Stewart: In the course of the 1984 investment and financing review I accepted the board's case for the inclusion in its capital programme of the installation of a submarine cable to the Western Isles, in view of the expected savings compared with diesel generation. Forecasts of future electricity demand in its area are the responsibility of the hydro board.

Private Patients

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for Scotland and for each year since 1979 the income received from private patients in National Health Service hospitals: (a) in gross terms, (b) revalued by the retail price index and (c) revalued by the National Health Service pay and prices index.

Mr. John MacKay: The available information is as follows:

Year	Gross income	Income at 1984 prices based on movement in Retail Price Index	Income at 1984 prices based on movement in NHS pay and prices*
1979-80	525,691	802,783	862,133
1980-81	688,427	903,698	881,875

Year	Gross income	Income at 1984 prices based on movement in Retail Price Index	*Income at 1984 prices based on movement in NHS pay and prices
1981-82	844,507	994,491	999,896
1982-83	650,205	715,095	723,028
1983-84	1,000,075	1,050,979	1,058,079

* The pay and prices index used is that maintained by DHSS for hospital and community health services expenditure. No separate index for pay and price movements in the NHS in Scotland is available.

Radioactivity

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the 20 areas in Scotland with the lowest levels of naturally occurring radioactivity.

Mr. Younger: The National Radiological Protection Board has measured the gamma radiation dose rates due to the naturally occurring radioactivity present in rocks and soils in about 80 per cent. of the 10 kilometre grid squares of the national grid in Scotland. Those sites showing the lowest values are as follows:

Grid Square	Dose Rate, Micrograys/ Year	Area	Region
NC35	10	Strath Dionard, South of Cape Wrath	Highland
NM64	20	Near Lochaline, Sound of Mull	Highland
NC73	20	Badanlock Forest, West of Kinbrace	Highland
NC02	20	Inverpolly, South of Lochinver	Highland
NM97	20	Glen Garvan, West of Fort William	Highland
ND15	30	Mybster, West of Wick	Highland
ND24	30	South West of Wick	Highland
NC12	30	East of Lochinver	Highland
NC23	30	Unapool, North East of Lochinver	Highland
NC46	30	Achosnich, Ardnamurchan North of Tobermory	Highland
NC14	40	Scourie, South of Cape Wrath	Highland
NC13	40	Between Scourie and Kylestrome, South of Cape Wrath	Highland
NN55	40	Loch Rannoch, East of Glen Coe	Tayside
NC36	40	Kyle of Durness, South East of Cape Wrath	Highland
NB34	50	East of Barvas, Isle of Lewis	Western Isles Islands Area
NC24	50	Laxford Bridge, South of Cape Wrath	Highland
NM 54	60	Killundine, Sound of Mull	Highland
NC83	60	Kinbrace Northwest of Helmsdale	Highland
NC32	60	Loch A'Ghriarna, Northwest of Lairg	Highland
NN75	70	Loch Kinardochy Northwest of Aberfeldy	Tayside

Colleges of Education

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland with reference to pararaph 1:3 of the report by the Comptroller and Auditor General on the Scottish colleges of education, for what reasons the Scottish Education Department considers the present arrangements for the planning of higher education unsatisfactory; and what proposals he has to improve the arrangements for the planning of higher education in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Forward planning of degree and degree-equivalent provision in the non-university sector of Scottish higher education is carried out by the Scottish education department, in consultation with the institutions offering such provision and with other interests, but there no formal arrangements for including the universities in that framework. My right hon. Friend will be considering future planning arrangements for the whole of Scottish higher education in the light of the report by the Scottish Tertiary Education Advisory Council, which he expects to receive later this year.

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the detailed criteria applied to lecturers in Scottish colleges of education for the receipt of Crombie compensation.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Crombie compensation is payable to college of education staff who satisfy the requirements of the Grant-Aided Colleges (Compensation) (Scotland) Regulations 1977, as amended by the Grant-Aided Colleges (Compensation) (Scotland) Amendment Regulations 1981, which had the effect of disapplying the 1977 regulations where loss of employment or loss of diminution of emoluments occurs as a result of a direction on student intakes given or regulations on college closures made after 14 August 1981. Copies of the 1977 and 1981 regulations are available in the Library.

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many lecturers in Scottish colleges of education received Crombie compensation in (a) 1983-84 and (b) 1984-85.

Mr. Allan Stewart: There were two new cases in 1983-84 and three in 1984-85.

Children (Tooth Decay)

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what was the percentage proportion of children of different ages with known tooth decay in Scotland over each of the last five years;

(2) what was the average number of teeth with known tooth decay experienced by children in Scotland over each of the last five years.

Mr. John MacKay: Detailed information is available only for 1983 as follows:

Age of children (years)	Percentage of children with one or more permanent teeth that are, or have been, decayed	Average number of permanent teeth with decay experience
5	2	0·0
6	11	0·2
7	37	0·8
8	60	1·5
9	70	2·1
10	79	2·7
11	88	3·6
12	90	4·5
13	94	5·9
14	95	6·8
15	98	8·4

Industrial Output

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest figure for the output of (a) production and construction industries and (b) manufacturing industries in Scotland, as a proportion of output in June 1979.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The index of industrial production and construction for Scotland is compiled quarterly, and the latest available information relates to the fourth quarter of 1984. For the sectors requested, output in that period as a proportion of the figure for the second quarter of 1979 was as follows:

Production and Construction Industries	0·923
Manufacturing Industries	0·940

Job Losses

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest figure for the number of jobs lost since June 1979 in (a) manufacturing industries and (b) all industries and services.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The seasonally adjusted number of employees in employment in Scotland is provisionally estimated to have fallen by 174,000 in manufacturing industries and by 163,000 in all industries and services between June 1979 and December 1984.

Electronics Industry (Labour Statistics)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state the numbers of employees in electronics in Scotland in (a) 1979 and (b) 1985, or the nearest available date; if he will break down those employees by sector and occupations; and if he will explain the basis on which he calculates his figures or estimates, including the proportion of electronics employers consulted in the completion of the figures.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Comprehensive information is not available on the basis requested. In 1978, the total number of employees in employment in electronics is estimated to have been some 37,000 and the breakdown by MLH industries in the 1968 standard industrial classification was as follows:

	thousand
MLH 354 Scientific and industrial instruments and systems	8·3
MLH 363 Telegraph and telephone apparatus and equipment	2·7
MLH 364 Radio and electronic components	10·0
MLH 365 Broadcast receiving and sound reproducing equipment	0·7
MLH 366 Electronic computers	8·1
MLH 367 Radio, radar and electronic capital goods	7·4

These estimates are taken from the Annual Census of Employment.

Total employment in the electronics industry in mid-1983 is estimated to have been 42,500: this estimate is based on information held in the regional data system which incorporates employment information provided by employers to a range of Government inquiries and also from other sources. It is not directly comparable with the 1978 estimate because of the change in the standard industrial classification introduced in 1980.

NHS (Staff)

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many medical laboratory scientific officers are employed by the National Health Service in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: The latest available statistics show that at 30 September 1984 2227·2 whole-time equivalent medical laboratory scientific officers were employed.

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many principal medical laboratory scientific officers are employed by the National Health Service in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: The latest available statistics show that at 30 September 1984 nine whole-time equivalent principal medical laboratory scientific officers were employed.

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many physicists, biochemists and clinical psychologists are employed by the National Health Service in Scotland; and, of each group, how many are in the top grade.

Mr. John MacKay: The information requested, based on the latest available statistics as at 30 September 1984, is as follows:

Grade	Whole-time equivalent	Whole-time equivalent top grade
Physicists	120·0	14·0
Biochemists	278·8	21·0
Clinical Psychologists	144·6	15·0

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many young people in Scotland have had experience of the youth training scheme; and how many subsequently secured permanent jobs.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Some 83,733 young people have entered the youth training scheme in Scotland between its inception in 1983 and the end of May 1985. Precise information on the number of YTS trainees subsequently taking up employment is not available. However, the results from the Manpower Services Commission's sample survey of 15 per cent. of young people who left the scheme between July and September 1984 suggest that some 56 per cent. of leavers in Scotland were in employment some three months after leaving the scheme. The full results of the sample survey are available in the Library.

Labour

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people under the age of 25 years are currently unemployed in Lothian, and in Scotland as a whole.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's letter of 22 October 1984 to all Scottish Members. The information requested is available in the House of Commons Library.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Language Teaching

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to encourage the teaching of modern foreign languages in schools.

Mr. Dunn: The White Paper "Better Schools" (Cmnd. 9469) published in March, made clear our view that the great majority of pupils should receive in the first three years of secondary school a course in a foreign language designed to be of lasting value; that most should continue to study a foreign language in years four and five of secondary school; and that a second foreign language should be offered to those pupils who can benefit from it. These issues will be considered further in the policy statement on foreign languages which we propose to issue later this year.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how many pupils in state schools in the United Kingdom learn Japanese;

(2) how many pupils in United Kingdom state schools learn languages other than European ones; and how many learn each language.

Mr. Dunn: Returns to the Department do not provide these figures; but maintained school provision for non-European languages is rare.

School Meals

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was (a) the total Government expenditure on school meals and (b) expenditure on free school meals for each year since 1978-79 expressed in (i) cash terms, (ii) real terms using 1984-85 prices and (iii) index form using 100 as a base for 1978-79; what was the proportion of the school population receiving school meals during the period; and what was the proportion receiving free school meals.

Mr. Dunn: The information is in the following table. It is for local authority expenditure only; the Government's contribution to this expenditure cannot be separately identified for school meals.

	Total expenditure on school meals			Expenditure on free school meals*			Pupils receiving
	£ million cash	£ million real† terms	Index	£ million cash	£ million real† terms	Index	Meals	Free meals
1978-79	376·0	670·0	100	118·3	210·8	100	65·9	13·9
1979-80	409·2	623·8	93	113·9	173·6	82	64·1	11·9
1980-81	391·2	502·5	75	124·7	160·2	76	48·2	9·9
1981-82	391·1	456·8	68	147·4	172·2	82	49·0	11·9
1982-83	411·3	449·4	67	174·8	191·0	91	49·4	13·9
1983-84	426·6	445·8	67	199·8	208·8	99	51·4	15·9

* The gross expenditure on all meals has been apportioned to free pupils in the ratio of free pupil to total pupil meals.
† Real term figures are the cash figures adjusted to 1984-85 prices using the GDP deflator at market prices.

Pupil Costs

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the average cost per pupil in (a) nursery schools, (b) nursery classes, (c) primary schools, (d) secondary schools and (e) special schools.

Mr. Dunn: The information as requested is given in the following table. It relates to 1983-84, the latest year for which firm figures are available.

Cost per pupil—England

	£ (cash)
Nursery schools	1,230
Nursery classes	855
Primary schools	725
Secondary schools	1,015
Special education	3,265

European University, Florence

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what contribution was made by the United Kingdom to the European University in Florence in the latest financial year; how many students attended the university; how many of those students were British; and what was the expenditure per student.

Mr. Dunn: The contribution of the United Kingdom to the European University Institute was £779,000 in the financial year 1984-85. The EUI is a wholly postgraduate institution whose international staff pursues programmes of research into European topics in the social and human sciences. These activities also provide both a framework of support for the preparation of individual doctoral theses and a forum for seminars and colloquia in which outstanding European scholars participate. The national contributions do not therefore relate solely to the support of individual doctoral students and there is no basis on which a meaningful unit cost per student could be derived. The total number of such students is 159 in the academic year 1984-85, of whom 21 are British citizens.

Warwickshire

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what information he has as to the number of teachers in post in Warwickshire; and how that figure compares with the figure for 1979;

(2) what information he has as to the number of pupils in schools in Warwickshire; and how that figure compares with the figure for 1979;

(3) what information he has as to the current pupil-teacher ratio in Warwickshire; and how that figure compares with 1979;

(4) what information he has as to the number of educational advisers in post in Warwickshire; and how that figure compares with the figure for 1979.

Mr. Dunn: The numbers of teachers and pupils and the pupil-teacher ratios in Warwickshire in 1979 and 1984, the latest year for which full information is available, are as follows:

Maintained nursery, primary & secondary schools

	1979 (January)	1984 (January)
Number of teachers in post*	4,527	4,016
Number of pupils in schools*	89,062	77,329
Pupil-teacher ratio overall	19·7	19·3

* Full-time plus full-time equivalent of part-time.

The Department does not routinely collect figures of educational advisers but information obtained specially from the local education authority is that there were 16 advisers in post in both January, 1979 and January 1984.

Teachers (Dispute)

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement about the teachers' pay dispute.

Sir Keith Joseph: On 23 May the management panel of the Burnham primary and secondary committee increased its 1985 pay offer to 5 per cent. The teachers' panel rejected this and again refused to go to arbitration. I set out the Government's position in my letter of 21 May to the education chairmen of the local authority associations. A copy of this letter has been placed in the Library.

Science and Engineering

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will list (a) the output of first degree science and engineering home graduates for each university and (b) the percentage change in each case over the previous year in each year since 1981.

Mr. Brooke: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

University Funding

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the percentage change in funding to each university by the Universities Grants Committee in each year since 1981.

Mr. Brooke: The percentage change in funding to each university by the University Grants Committee in each year between the academic years 1981-82 and 1983-84 (the latest year for which complete figures are available) is given below. The figures are based on the total recurrent grants paid to universities through the University Grants Committee plus the equipment and furniture grant. They exclude other non-recurrent Exchequer grants. The figures reflect a number of funding changes including the additions made to recurrent grant to compensate for changes in the level of the home undergraduate fee, the cost of compensating staff for redundancy or early retirement and changes to take account of the increase in the value of minor capital works that can be funded from recurrent grant. The different level of local authority rates and the inclusion of the costs of staff compensation make the changes from year to year and comparisons between individual universities potentially misleading.

Lecturers (Colleges of Education)

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the detailed criteria applied to lecturers in colleges of education for receipt of Crombie compensation.

Mr. Brooke: The conditions for the payment of Crombie compensation are laid down in The Colleges of Education (Compensation) Regulations 1975, (SI 1975 No. 1092) as amended by the Colleges of Education (Compensation) (Amendment) Regulations 1981, (SI 1981 No. 1088), copies of which are in the Library.

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many lecturers in colleges of education in England and Wales received Crombie compensation in (a) 1983-84 and (b) 1984-85.

Mr. Brooke: The information requested is not held centrally.

Teachers

Mr. Lord asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many teachers were employed by local education authorities in England and Wales in the years 1954, 1964, 1974 and 1984; and what was the cost of their employment in each of these years.

Mr. Dunn: The information that is readily available is given in the following table. The figures relate to maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools.

	No. of Full-time Equivalent Teachers (thousands)	Teacher Salary Costs (£million, at current prices)
1953	Not available	137
1964	300	375
1974	434	1,095
1984	439	4,813

Examining Boards

Mr. Lord asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many examining boards in England and Wales are currently setting examinations for GCE A-level and O-level, and CSE examinations; and what steps are being taken to reduce the number.

Mr. Dunn: Currently eight boards set GCE A and O-level examinations and 12 set CSE examinations. The new GCSE examinations, which are to replace O-level and CSE from 1988 onwards, will be administered by five groups of GCE and CSE boards.

Educational Advisers

Mr. Lord asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many educational advisers were employed by local education authorities in England and Wales in the years 1954, 1964, 1974 and 1984; and what was the cost of their employment in each of these years.

Mr. Dunn: Information on numbers of advisors is not available centrally for 1954, 1964 or 1974. There were about 1,900 local education authority inspectors and advisers in post in England at the end of 1984. The cost of advisers is not separately identifiable in figures available centrally. Information about local education authority advisers in Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Teacher Training

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to publish the replacement to circular 11/78 about the criteria for entry to teacher training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: A draft of a replacement for circular 11/78, which would offer revised guidance on medical standards for entry to initial teacher training, was issued for consultation in September 1984. Responses to the draft are under consideration and the circular will be issued as soon as possible.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received concerning the inclusion of the medical concept of deafness in the draft circular to replace circular 11/78 about the criteria for entry to teacher training; and whether he will make a statement on using ability to communicate as a criteria for entry to teacher training.

Mr. Dunn: Some 10 of the organisations which commented on the draft circular have made representations about the guidance included in the draft on the implications of defective hearing for admission to teacher training. These and other representations on the draft circular are being considered. Decisions on admissions to courses of initial teacher training rest with the training institutions, which have a responsibility to satisfy themselves, in the light of the medical advice available to them, as to the health and physical capacity for teaching of intending entrants to initial training. A relevant consideration is the implication of any hearing defect for the person's capacity to give effective service as a teacher in the maintained system.

Dentistry

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the percentage of the population in Scotland, England and Wales attending degree courses for dentistry in universities in the United Kingdom for each of the last 20 years, giving separate figures for Scotland, England and Wales; and what were the corresponding figures in each case for the percentages qualifying.

Mr. Brooke: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

University Students

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what is the percentage of the population in Scotland attending universities in the United Kingdom in each of the last 20 years;

(2) what is the percentage of the population in England attending universities in the United Kingdom in each of the last 20 years;

(3) what is the percentage of the population in Wales attending universities in the United Kingdom in each of the last 20 years.

Mr. Brooke: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Youth Training

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the participation rate for 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 and 21-year-olds in education and training in each of the years since 1975; and what information he has as to how these figures compare with the rates for the United Kingdom's principal economic competitors.

Sir Keith Joseph: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are now employed in the Coventry travel-to-work area; and how that figure compares with each month since the new travel-to-work areas were established.

Mr. Alan Clark: I regret that the information is not available. Comprehensive employment statistics for local travel-to-work areas are not available except for dates when censuses of employment are taken. Censuses have been taken triennially since 1978 and the latest results are for September 1981. At that time, there were 215,000 employees in employment in the Coventry and Hinckley travel-to-work area.

More up-to-date employment figures for travel-to-work areas will become available following the publication of the 1984 census of employment early in 1986.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are now employed in the Rugby local authority area; and how that compares with each month for the last year.

Mr. Alan Clark: Employment statistics for local authority areas are not available except for dates when censuses of employment are taken. The latest available figures are from the 1981 census of employment and show that 31,300 employees were employed in the local authority district of Rugby at that time. Estimates from the following September 1984 census are not yet available.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many people under the age of 21 years in (a) Slough, (b) Windsor and (c) Bracknell have never had a job since leaving school.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is in the Library. The table shows, for the Slough, Windsor and Bracknell jobcentre areas, the number of unemployed claimants aged 18 years and younger who have not had a job since leaving full time education. No information is separately available for those aged 19 and 20 years.

Unemployed school leavers aged 18 and under—9 May 1985

	Number
Slough	132
Windsor	3
Bracknell	71

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many people under the age of 25 years have been unemployed for (a) between six months and one year, (b) between one year and two years and (c) over two years in the Slough travel-to-work area.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is available in the Library. On 11 April 1985, the latest date for which an analysis of unemployment by age and duration is available, in the former Slough travel-to-work area 580 claimants under 25 years of age had been unemployed for between six months and one year, 278 for between one year and two years, and 186 for over two years.

2,4,5-T

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many complaints have been received by the Health and Safety Executive concerning the effects of the 16 proprietary products containing 2,4,5-T listed in the answer to the hon. Member for Carmarthen (Dr. Thomas) on 7 June, Official Report, column 294, in each of the last five years; and what action has been taken in pursuance of those complaints.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The number of incidents involving alleged damage to health reported to Her Majesty's agricultural inspectorate from 1980-84 was three. Each incident was investigated.

Agricultural Inspectorate

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Employment where the 161 agricultural inspectors mentioned in his answer of 18 June, Official Report, column 74, are based.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: One hundred and forty-nine of the 161 agricultural inspectors in post on 1 June work in the field and are based at 34 offices throughout Great Britain. A further 10 work in the agricultural inspectorate's headquarters on Merseyside, and two work in other parts of the Health and Safety Executive in Merseyside and Preston.

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will express the agricultural inspectorate budget, for each of the last six years, in 1985 prices.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Spending by the agricultural inspectorate is given in column (2) of the following table. When these figures are adjusted using the single index most widely used for such purposes, the gross domestic product deflator, the figures are as shown in column (3).

When using those figures it should be remembered that a number of elements within the agricultural inspectorate's budget have not moved in line with the gross domestic product over this period.

Year (1)	Spend £ thousands (2)	At 1984-85 prices £ thousands (3)
1984-85	3,411	3,411
1983-84	3,342	3,295
1982-83	3,291	3,603
1981-82	2,746	3,213
1980-81	2,454	3,207
1979-80	2,008	3,129

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of prosecutions made by the Health and Safety Executive agricultural inspectorate between 1979 and 1985 and the average cost or penalty imposed at 1985 prices.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The number of prosecutions undertaken by Her Majesty's agricultural inspectorate between 1979 and 1984 and the average penalty imposed at 1985 prices are shown in the following table:

Year	Number of informations laid	Average penalty relative to 1985 prices
1979	295	140
1980	301	94
1981	285	111
1982	208	148
1983	220	167
1984	306	148

Notes: (1) Information for 1985 is not yet available.
(2) Figures for 1984 are provisional.

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Employment what arrangements were made by the Manpower Services Commission for the provision of sign language interpreters for deaf trainees on the youth training scheme for off-the-job training in colleges and elsewhere.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Manpower Services Commission recognises the value of sign language interpreters for deaf young people on the youth training scheme. The prime responsibility for providing these interpreters rests with managing agents and sponsors, but the commission will consider paying for them on an individual basis when an unmet need has been identified and the costs cannot be met by the managing agent or sponsor.

Training

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will list the numbers (a) entering apprenticeships, (b) in apprenticeships and (c) completing apprenticeships in each of the industries for which industrial training boards have operated in each year since 1964;

(2) what was the projected cost of the youth training scheme at current prices in the year of its announcement; and what are the costs for 1984-85 and the projected cost for 1985-86 adjusted to the prices of that year;

(3) what was the level of Exchequer support for apprenticeships at current and at constant prices in each of the years from 1964 to 1985;

(4) how many people benefited from the adult training strategy in 1984-85; what is the estimate for 1985-86 and 1986-87; what will be the average number of direct contact hours they will have with trainers; and how these numbers and averages compare with adult training conducted in the years 1975 to 1984 for which his Department was directly or indirectly responsible.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Grenada

Mr. Freeman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he is satisfied with progress with the return to democratic and peaceful government in Grenada.

Mr. Renton: The report of the British high commissioner to Grenada who observed the elections held in Grenada on 3 December 1984 concluded that the proceedings had been conducted in a free, fair and secret manner. A copy of the high commissioner's report was placed in the Library of the House. Nothing has happened since that has changed our views on the peaceful progress of democracy in Grenada.

High Commission, Colombo

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions in the period since 1 April the police have visited Her Majesty's high commission in Colombo, Sri Lanka.

Mr. Renton: To the high commission's knowledge there have been four visits. Two were to inquire about theft and one concerned an unruly visitor who was removed at the high commission's request. The fourth occurred early on 11 June when an individual in the queue outside the high commission ran away when approached by the police.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements are made for those people wishing to apply for visas to travel to the United Kingdom from Colombo to queue at the high commission.

Mr. Renton: Queues form each working day outside the high commission compound before the consular immigration section opens. Once open, the high commission admits those applicants whom it can process that day. The remaining applicants are given appointments for the following day. The high commission is currently processing approximately 80 applications per working day.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements there are for asylum seekers from areas of Sri Lanka outside Colombo to contact or be interviewed by Her Majesty's high commission.

Mr. Renton: There are no arrangements for entry clearance applicants to be interviewed outside Colombo.

The high commission has received no reports of any problems experienced by Sri Lankans travelling to Colombo for interviews. All applicants, including those from the north and east, are asked whether they had any problems and, to date, none has complained. Applicants can, of course, telephone the high commission from all over Sri Lanka.

Chile

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many interviews have been conducted by staff in the embassy in Chile with people wishing to seek refuge in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Renton: None in the past 12 months.

Mr. Corbyn: asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many prison or detention centre visits have been made by embassy staff in Chile in the past two years; and how many prisoners were interviewed during those visits.

Mr. Renton: In the last two years only one British citizen has been in detention in Chile. He was arrested in October 1983 and has been visited six times since his arrest.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a copy of the paper of the South American department of his Department dated 19 November 1984, referring to an arms embargo against Chile.

Mr. Renton: No.

Greece (Airport Security)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Greek Government regarding security standards at international airports in Greece; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: At the meeting of the Foreign Affairs Council of the European Community of 18 June, my right hon. and learned Friend drew attention to the anxiety felt by many about security at Athens airport. He offered assistance should the Greek authorities require it. We understand an IATA security team is to visit Athens shortly at Greek request.

Middle East

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's ambassador in Amman has reported to him on the recent speech by the chairman of the political committee of the Palestine National Council, as recorded on BBC World Service Radio Newsreel on 9 June, criticising the Hussein-Arafat agreement; and whether the Ambassador has conveyed any message to King Hussein about his reaction.

Mr. Luce: We have noted criticism by individual Palestinian representatives of the agreement of 11 February between King Hussein and the chairman of the Palestinian Liberation Organisation. Official PLO spokesmen stress Mr. Arafat's support for King Hussein's initiative.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what report he has received from Her Majesty's ambassador in Tel Aviv of the speech to the Knesset by Prime Minister Shimon Peres on 10 June in which he put forward a peace plan; and what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the substance of the proposals.

Mr. Luce: We consider that Mr. Peres' remarks contain a number of points which contribute usefully to the narrowing of the gap between the parties to the Arab-Israel dispute.

Uganda

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has made any representations to the Ugandan Government following the publication of Amnesty International's report on atrocities in that country; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I have read the report and its recommendations with great concern, and it is being studied in detail. I have invited the Ugandan high commissioner to discuss the issues raised.

Old Admiralty Building (Security)

Mr. Crowther asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what increase in expenditure will result from the decision to transfer the responsibility for silent hours security cover at the Old Admiralty Building from the Property Services Agency custodians to his Department's security force.

Mr. Renton: I do not expect expenditure to increase as a result of the decision to withdraw from the present arrangements with the Property Services Agency custody services at the Old Admiralty building. There may indeed be some small savings.

Mr. Peter Nadin

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a copy of the recent letter from the Parliamentary Under-Secretary, the hon. Member for Mid-Sussex (Mr. Renton), to the hon. Member for Islington, North regarding the death of Mr. Peter Nadin in Greece.

Mr. Renton: Yes. The text is as follows:

"In my reply to your Parliamentary question on 25 March, I said that I would write to you when a reply was received from the Greek authorities following further representations made by our Embassy about the case of Mr. Peter Nadin.

The Greek Ministry of Foreign Affairs have now made available copies, with translations, of the papers from the police files dealing with the death of Mr. Nadin. I enclose copies of these documents a set of which has also been sent to Croydon Coroner's Court. Our Consular Department have written to Mr. Nadin's widow informing her of this.

The papers do not give many details of the events leading up to Mr. Nadin's death. However, our Consul reports that the Public Prosecutor on Syrob has promised to review the case and to send the Embassy his findings through the Ministry of Justice. The Public Prosecutor gave no indication of when this is likely to be but I will write to you again when his findings have been received."

THE ARTS

Arts Council

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts (1) what negotiating machinery exists between the Arts Council of Great Britain and the trades unions with which it is involved;

(2) if he will state the qualifications of Mr. Ronald Grierson to be a member of the Arts Council of Great Britain.

Mr. Waldegrave: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

South Bank Board

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts if he will make a statement about the progress of the South Bank board.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Arts Council of Great Britain will be setting up a South Bank Board when the Local Government Bill becomes law and the necessary amendments have been made to its charter; meanwhile, the council's officials are carrying out such preliminary work as is possible in the circumstances.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Office Accommodation

35. Mr. Dormand asked the Lord Privy Seal whether he is satisfied with the progress being made in providing office accommodation for hon. Members; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Biffen: Yes. Final sketch plans for phase 1 of the new parliamentary building have been developed by the design team in accordance with the design brief given to the architects in the Services Committee's Third Report of 1983-84. These plans are now under consideration by the Services Committee's New Building Sub-Committee.

37. Mr. Boyes asked the Lord Privy Seal what recent representations he has received from hon. and right hon. Members about the relative amounts of office space available to hon. Members in various parts of the House of Commons and its outbuildings.

Mr. Biffen: The subject of Members' accommodation has been raised with me by hon. Members on a number of recent occasions.

Library Staff (Statistics)

38. Mr. Chapman asked the Lord Privy Seal what estimate has been made of the proportion of House of Commons Library staff time spent on (a) dealing directly with hon. Members' requests and (b) dealing with research assistants' and other requests on behalf of hon. Members; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Biffen: On the basis of a survey taken on 13 June 1985, 80 per cent. of Library staff time was spent dealing directly with hon. Members' requests and 20 per cent. dealing with research assistants and other requests on behalf of hon. Members.

Running Costs

39. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Lord Privy Seal what were the total costs arising from the running of the House of Commons in 1984-85 on Votes for which he is responsible; how that compares with each of the past three financial years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Biffen: I am not directly responsible for any of the Votes out of which the costs of running the House of Commons are met. However the figures for the financial year 1984-85 is approximately £57 million. This compares with roughly £51 million for 1983-84, £45 million for 1982-83 and £42 million for 1981-82. These figures do not include the PSA's expenditure on the House of Commons, as figures are available only for the PSA's expenditure on the Palace of Westminster as a whole.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Lands Tribunal (Hearing)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Registrar of the Northern Ireland Lands Tribunal expects to be able to list for hearing the case of Mr. W. R. Mahood v Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland (Roads Service) concerning land at 68A Bangor Road, Newtownards.

Dr. Boyson: I understand that the case has been listed for mention before the Northern Ireland Lands Tribunal on Thursday 27 June.

Power Stations (Fuel)

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consideration is being given to converting oil-fired power stations to coal-lignite in addition to the Kilroot power station; and if he will list all Northern Ireland power stations which are oil-fired at present and which could be converted to coal-lignite burning stations.

Dr. Boyson: None. The other oil-fired power stations in Northern Ireland are Ballylumford and Coolkeeragh.

Combined Heat and Power

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what study he has carried out into whether a combined heat and power station in Northern Ireland would improve energy efficiency in the province.

Dr. Boyson: Northern Ireland is part of the national programme of studies on the potential for combined heat and power and district heating in the United Kingdom, which is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy. Under this programme the Department of Energy has offered the Belfast joint venture a grant of £250,000 to pursue further studies on combined heat and power in the city of Belfast.

Under the Northern Ireland energy conservation scheme, adminstered by the Department of Economic Development, financial assistance of up to 30 per cent. is available to industry and commerce for combined heat and power projects.

General Practitioners

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement outlining the present policy on the limitation and selection of general practitioner trainees in Northern Ireland, the reasons for this policy and the number involved.

Mr. Chris Patten: The policy of the Department of Health and Social Services is to match the number of doctors entering vocational training programmes with the estimated number of future general practice principal vacancies in Northern Ireland. The aim is to achieve a balance between the supply of and demand for general practitioners. The present intake to vocational training is 50 per annum.

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement outlining how the vocational training regulations, and the selection of general practitioner trainees, in Northern Ireland differ from those arrangements which obtain in Great Britain.

Mr. Chris Patten: The vocational training regulations in Northern Ireland, Scotland, England and Wales are similar and set out the medical experience which is required for a doctor in general practice to provide general medical services.

In Northern Ireland the intake to vocational training programmes is designed to match the estimated number of future general practitioner principal vacancies. The selection procedure is contained in departmental circulars, copies of which are available in the Library. In Great Britain the number of trainees accepted for vocational training is determined by the number of approved general practitioner training practices; trainees are selected by individual general practitioner trainers.

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give consideration to amending implementation of the vocational training regulations in line with the proposed European Economic Community directive on vocational training which has been accepted and approved by the General Medical Services Committee, United Kingdom.

Mr. Chris Patten: If the proposed directive is adopted by the Council of Ministers in the Community it will be necessary to amend the Medical Practitioner (Vocational Training) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1979 to make provision for immigrant doctors who have completed at least two years vocational training in other member states of the Community to enter general practice in Northern Ireland. It may also be necessary to amend the regulations to make vocational training mandatory for deputies, assistants and locums in general practice.

Private Patients

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give for Northern Ireland and for each year since 1979 the income received from private patients in National Health Service hospitals (a) in gross terms, (b) revalued by the retail price index and (c) revalued by the National Health Service pay and prices index.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information requested is shown in the following table.

Financial year	Private patient income £	Revalued to 1983-84 levels (retail prices index) £	Revalued to 1983-84 levels (NHS pay and prices) £
1979-80	547,947	796,277	849,318
1980-81	465,387	581,315	563,584
1981-82	595,997	719,368	666,921
1982-83	806,833	843,705	847,981
1983-84	1,036,336	1,036,336	1,036,336

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give for each year since 1979 the total amount Northern Ireland health boards have written off as bad debts because of private patients not paying their bills.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information requested is shown in the following table:

Financial year (in which debt arose)	Total amount of private patient bad debts written off £
1979-80	1,360
1980-81	574
1981-82	383
1982-83	2,490
1983-84	363

Droppin Well Bombing (Remands)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will give the length of custodial remand undergone by persons charged in connection with the Droppin Well bombing; and if he will make a statement as to when the trial of such persons may be expected to take place;

(2) how the period of custodial remand undergone by persons charged in connection with the Droppin Well bombing compares with the average period of remand without bail for persons charged with scheduled offences in Northern Ireland; and if he will comment on reasons for any abnormal delay in bringing persons charged in connection with the Droppin Well bombing to trial.

Mr. Scott: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

NHS (Staff)

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many medical laboratory scientific officers are employed by the National Health Service in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Chris Patten: Approximately 470.

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many principal medical laboratory scientific officers are employed by the National Health Service in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Chris Patten: None.

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many physicists, biochemists and clinical psychologists are employed by the National Health Service in Northern Ireland; and, of each group, how many are in the top grade.

Mr. Chris Patten: At 31 March 1985, there were 15 physicists, 21 biochemists and 34 clinical psychologists. Of these one, three and four respectively were employed in the top grade.

Lear Fan Ltd.

Mr. Arnold asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the implications of the decision of Lear Fan Ltd. to cease trading.

Dr. Boyson [pursuant to his reply, 3 June 1985, c. 85-86]: I can confirm that at 28 May 1984, $4·79 million was still to be provided by the Government under the 1982 financial assistance agreement. As a result of the company's decision to cease trading, the Government were released from this commitment. I am now informed that the following payments were made by the Government.

	£ million
Funding prior to September 1982	25·32
Under the September 1982 agreement	17·37
Non-selective assistance	1·25
Ulster Investment Bank guarantee	11·82

The total investment by Her Majesty's Government has therefore been £55·76 million, not £56·28 million as stated earlier.

In addition, the Government will make some payments to the receiver to enable him to secure the company's assets.

NATIONAL FINANCE

European Investment Bank

Mr. Lewis Stevens asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps have been taken to increase the capital of the European Investment Bank; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lawson: At its meeting on 11 June 1985, the board of governors of the European Investment Bank agreed that the subscribed capital of the bank should be doubled from 14·4 billion ecus to 28·8 billion ecus from 1 January 1986. Accordingly the board formally decided to increase the subscribed capital for the existing EC member states to 26·508 billion ecus; and further noted that, upon the accession of Spain and Portugal to the Community, subscribed capital would rise further to 28·8 billion ecus, as a result of those member states' subscriptions.

The need for the capital increase arises because EIB own resources loans outstanding are limited to 2·5 times the level of member states' subscribed capital. By the end of 1985, EIB will be close to the current limit, and the new capital increase will allow continued expansion of EIB lending and its contribution to Community development.

Within the new level of 28·8 billion ecus, there will be a redistribution of subscribed capital to bring Italy's subscribed capital up to the same level as that of the United Kingdom, France and Germany.

As a consequence of these decisions, the United Kingdom's subscribed capital will rise from 3·15 billion ecus to 5·509 billion ecus; and the United Kingdom's share of subscribed capital in the enlarged Community will be about 19·1 per cent., the same as that of France, Germany and Italy.

The board of governors also decided that member states would pay in 7·5 per cent. of the increase in subscribed capital, in 12 semi-annual instalments beginning on 30 April 1988 and ending on 31 October 1993. Thus, the United Kingdom will pay some 29·5 million ecus—or about £17 million at the current rate of exchange—in each of the financial years from 1988-89 to 1993-94 inclusive. Payments will be charged to the Consolidated Fund, under section 2(3) of the European Communities Act 1972.

To match the redistribution of subscribed capital described, there will be a redistribution of title to EIB reserves and provisions, as they stand at the end of 1985.

Mortgage Interest Relief

Mr. Lewis Stevens asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether, in view of clause 36 of the Finance Bill, any changes are envisaged to the mortgage interest relief at source regulations as they affect loans which qualify for mortgage interest relief but are above the mortgage interest relief limit.

Mr. Moore: The board of Inland Revenue is issuing a press release tomorrow containing a draft of the amendments it proposes to make, after the enactment of the current Finance Bill, to the MIRAS regulations affecting loans above the limit. Copies of the press release will be placed in the Library.

Inflation

Mr. Latham asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer to what factors he attributes recent sharp increases in the rate of inflation; why this has exceeded the expectations which he announced in his Budget statement; and when he expects to resume progress towards the Government's ultimate objective of price stability.

Mr. Peter Rees: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

European Community (Budget)

Mr. Higgins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the extent of the delay in the submission to the Council by the European Community Commission of the figures necessary for the establishment of the reference framework for the 1986 European Community budget.

Mr. Lawson: Article 1 of the budget discipline conclusions requires the reference framework to be fixed at the beginning of the budgetary procedure. The 1986 budgetary procedure has been delayed because of the late adoption of the 1985 budget and the preliminary draft budget has not yet been published. However, the Commission has provided the figures necessary to calculate the reference framework.

Mr. Spearing asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps have been taken by the Council of the European Economic Community in respect of the reference framework for the 1986 budget as required in articles 1-5 in its Conclusion R. 4972/84 Com (84) 83; and what maximum level of expenditure has been set.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The 11 June ECOFIN Council discussed the procedure for applying the budget discipline conclusions to the 1986 budget. The Italian and Luxembourg presidencies are now arranging a meeting with the European Parliament after which ECOFIN will be in a position to fix the reference framework in accordance with the budget discipline conclusions.

Exchange Rates

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer further to the answer dated 14 May, Official Report, column 85, concerning real exchange rates, if he will provide in addition figures to show (a) the relative export prices for manufactures and (b) the latest increase in the nominal rate in each case since the fourth quarter of 1984.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I regret that information on other countries' export prices is not available for the period since Q4 1984. It is not therefore possible to answer the first part of the question. Changes in sterling's nominal exchange rates since the fourth quarter of 1984 against certain other currencies are as follows:

Increase (+)/decrease (−) of nominal sterling exchange rate Average Q4 1984 to 20 June 1985

	Per cent.
Dollar	−4·4
Yen	−0·1
Deutschmark	+3·2
French franc	+2·4
Belgium franc*	+1·1
Italian lira	+6·7
Dutch guilder	+3·0

* The Luxembourg franc has the same external value as the Belgian franc.

EC Commission (Staff)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many persons were employed by the European Economic Community Commission on the most recent date for which figures are available; what was the total cost of administering the Commission on the same date; and what were the comparable figures, respectively, five and 10 years previously.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 13 June 1985, c. 507]: The information requested is set out in the table:

	*Staff complement	Staffing cost (mcu)†‡
1975	9,787	425
1980	11,266	612
1985	12,747	594

* Numbers of permanent staff employed.
† Costs include wages, training, travel expenses, pensions etc.
‡ 1985 prices.

EC (Finance)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total sum contributed by the United Kingdom to the EEC since 1 January 1973, what has been the total amount received in grants, rebates and other payments over the same period; and how much of the total sums received were in respect of payments to facilitate the subsidised export of food to third countries.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 20 June 1985, c. 222-23]: The most recent information of the United Kingdom's total contribution to the EC including receipts and refunds since 1 January 1973 is set out in the table:

£ million

	Gross contribution	Receipts other than refunds	Refunds	Net total
From 1 January 1973 to 31 December 1984	17,895	9,325	3,145	5,425

£1,773 million of total United Kingdom receipts were in respect of subsidy payments to farmers and traders to facilitate the export of food to third countries at world prices.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the percentage increase in the overall spending of the Common Market which will take place if the VAT element in its income is increased from 1 to 1·4 per cent.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 20 June 1985, c. 222-23]: Increases in the overall spending of the Community from year to year will depend on the decisions taken by the Community's budgetary authority. In the case of the Council of Ministers, these decisions will be taken in accordance with the agreed arrangements on budget discipline. The potential increase in the Community's income, measured against own resources available at present and disregarding the supplementary finance provided in 1984 and 1985 through the inter-governmental agreements will amount to some 15 to 20 per cent., depending on the size of the United Kingdom's abatements.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the increase in the United Kingdom gross contribution to the EEC consequent on the proposal to increase the VAT contribution from 1 to 1·4 per cent.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 20 June 1985, c. 222-23]: Because of the Fontainebleau abatement system, the United Kingdom's VAT rate, post-abatement, is likely to be less than 1 per cent. whatever the VAT rate within the 1·4 per cent. ceiling in other member states. Thus, the Fontainebleau measures, involving both the increase in the VAT ceiling to 1·4 per cent. and the introduction of arrangements for abating the United Kingdom's VAT contribution, will not of themselves lead to any increase in the United Kingdom's gross contribution.

Mr. Marlow asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out the projected net value added tax percentage contribution to the European Economic Community for 1985 and for each of the last four calender years accordingly to (a) the value added tax share contribution and (b) the previous formula.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 20 June 1985, c. 222]: The figures requested cannot form the basis of a valid comparison, since the Fontainebleau formula applies only to 1985 and subsequent years, and before that there has been no established formula for refunding or abating the United Kingdom's excess contributions.

Mr. Marlow asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out the effective value added tax percentage rate paid into the European Economic Community budget net of rebates corresponding to that year for each of the last four calendar years.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 20 June 1985, c. 222]: The table sets out the information requested for the years 1981 to 1984. For each year the table shows the United Kingdom's actual VAT rebate as it would have been reduced by the amount of the net refund paid in respect of that year in the following year.

	Effective VAT percentage rate
1981	*0·13
1982	0·55
1983	0·74
1984	†0·66

* This figure reflects the Commission's overestimate of the United Kingdom's net contribution for 1981 and a correspondingly high rebate.

† The VAT rate shown for 1984 does not reflect the supplementary contribution made by the United Kingdom under the 1984 intergovernmental agreement; allowance for that contribution would imply a higher effective VAT rate for 1984.

The figures shown do not provide a valid basis for comparison between the application of the Fontainebleau abatement system and the ad hoc refunds paid in the earlier years shown. The latter were not calculated according to a percentage formula and were falling in amount between 1981 and 1983.

SOCIAL SERVICES

State Earnings-related Pension Scheme

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will now publish for the period up to 2035 the estimates for gross domestic product which were based on the assumptions about earnings and prices used in assessing the cost of the state earnings-related pension scheme for that period.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 21 June at columns 249-50.

Skoal Bandits

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what discussions Her Majesty's Government have had with the manufacturers of Skoal Bandits; what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the marketing of this product in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Discussions have taken place about the manufacture and promotion of this product in the United Kingdom, and the company has agreed to undertake further independent research to establish the extent of health hazards associated with it.

Single Payments (Sheffield)

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average waiting time for claimants requesting single payments applications to be processed in the Sheffield area; how many applications are outstanding in Sheffield over the 14 day limit currently; and what is the average waiting time for processing of single payments applications throughout all regions.

Mr. Whitney: Sheffield area is served by four of the Department's offices and the average time taken by those offices to process a claim for a single payment is four weeks. At 18 June there were 2,148 claims for single payments outstanding in those offices for 14 or more days.

Information on the average time taken to process single payments in all regions could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total number of claimants of supplementary benefit in February 1985.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that the information requested is not available. The latest information available is 4·6 million in August 1984.

Source: Local office quarterly statistical inquiry August 1984.

Ambulance Services

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his answer of 1 May, Official Report, column 176, to what factors he attributes the decline in the use of ambulance services by non-NHS patients since 1975.

Mr. John Patten: Some of the reduction in the total of non-National Health Service patient journeys since 1975 is attributable to social services departments and educational departments making alternative transport arrangements, including the provision of their own transport. In addition, it seems likely that the increase in the number of private ambulance services and voluntary bodies transporting private patients has had an influence.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he exercises any controls over the establishment, staffing and standards of private ambulance services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: No; it is for the customers and particularly their professional advisers to ensure that the service for which they are paying is able to provide the facilities and meet the standards required.

Health Authorities (Advice)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his answer of 1 May, Official Report, column 174, if he will publish in the Official Report his advice to health authorities of 29 March.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The management instruction to health authorities referred to was not issued in written form. On 25 March this year our officials, acting on ministerial instructions, telephoned all regional health authorities to ask them to tell all district health authorities the same day that no contract awarded in pursuance of our competitive tendering policy should be revoked or terminated without prior consultations with the region and the Department.

Private Patient Care

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) in what circumstances private patient officers are designated in the National Health Service;

(2) what are the functions of private patient officers in the National Health Service;

(3) how many private patient officers are in post; and at what cost to the National Health Service;

(4) what is his Department's estimate of the annual extra administrative cost to the National Health Service due the private patients.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Private patient officers are designated in National Health Service hospitals where the treatment of private patients is authorised. Their duties are concerned with all non-clinical aspects of private patient activity, especially in relation to the implementation of control procedures for identifying private patients, recording admissions and attendances, and recovering charges. We do not record information on the number in post centrally, as it is for local management to make these appointments. We have made it clear that we regard failure to do so as a serious weakness that must be rectified. We do not specifically identify the extra cost of administering private patient business, but private patient charges take account of administration costs.

NHS (Private Patients)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services by what percentage the average daily charge for use of a National Health Service pay bed and the average charge for private use of a National Health Service operating theatre have risen since 1979; and if he will express the increase (a) in gross terms, (b) after allowance for movement in the retail price index and (c) after allowing for movement in National Health Service pay and prices.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Charges for private patient pay beds are related to the class of hospital in which treatment is given. The percentages which follow are derived from averages covering all classes and take account of the relative use made by private patients in each class.

In money terms, pay beds charges increased by 101 per cent. and theatre charges by 80 per cent. over the period. Relative to movements in the RPI these represented increases of 32 and 18 per cent., respectively. I see no sensible purpose in using the other indicator for inflation suggested by the question.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for each region and for each year since 1979 the total amount health authorities have written off because of private patients not paying their bills.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have not collected this information centrally, but we have arranged for it to be included in the annual accounts of health authorities from 1985-86.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for each region and for each year since 1979 the income from private patients in National Health Service hospitals (a) in gross terms, (b) revalued by the retail price index and (c) revalued by the National Health Service pay and prices index.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The gross figures and the figures revalued by the retail prices index are shown in the following tables. I see no sensible reason for revaluing the figures by the other indicator referred to.

Blood

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many units of blood have been supplied by the national blood transfusion service to non-National Health Service hospitals in each year since 1970.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In 1982—the earliest year for which we have figures — regional blood transfusion centres (RTCs) in England and Wales issued 31,437 units of blood to non-NHS hospitals. The corresponding provisional figures for 1983 and 1984 are 40,786 and 49,391. We do not have information centrally on the number of units supplied to non-NHS hospitals through NHS hospital blood banks. Some of the apparent increase is probably due to non-NHS hospitals increasingly obtaining their supplies direct from RTCs rather than through hospital blood banks.

NHS (Competitive Tendering)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the occasions on which his Department has sought to persuade health authorities to change their decisions following programmes of competitive tendering; and if he will state the consequence in each case.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not keep a central record of all our communications with health authorities about their decisions on competitive tendering programmes, and we could assemble the information requested only at disproportionate cost. We have intervened only when tendering programmes were unsatisfactory or when there were good reasons to believe that health authorities had taken or intended to take decisions which were not in the best interests of patients.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will name, for each tendering exercise of which his Department is aware and which was completed since the last named in his answer of 1 May, Official Report, columns 175-76, the health authority, the hospital concerned and the successful tenderer.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We collect this information from the health service only quarterly. No returns have been due since my reply to the hon. Member on 1 May at columns 175-76, and so I am unable to add to it.

Human Organs and Blood

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce legislation to make illegal the sale of human organs and blood.

Mr. John Patten: We are opposed to the sale of human organs for transplantation, which has been condemned by the International Transplantation Society, the British Transplantation Society and a Council of Europe resolution to which the United Kingdom is signatory; I understand that the General Medical Council has been asked to give further advice on the ethical issues involved. We are determined to find ways of stopping the practice and have already made it clear that we regard it as "improper and undesirable" in terms of the Registered Homes Act 1984 and that it could, therefore, be grounds for cancellation of registration of a private hospital where it took place. We are examining the possibility of special legislation, although there would be difficulties where financial transactions take place overseas, and it would be important not to inhibit legitimate operations which save lives.

We also oppose the sale of blood, but are not aware of any such practice in this country. The national blood transfusion service does not pay its donors, and blood is supplied to non-NHS hospitals only on condition that no profit is made.

NHS (Staff)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether there are specific limitations in force over administrative manpower in the National Health Service.

Mr. John Patten: No. We have asked health authorities to examine critically the level of administrative and clerical staff and as a result we expect reductions to be made.

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many medical laboratory scientific officers are employed by the National Health Service in England;

(2) how many principal medical laboratory scientific officers are employed by the National Health Service in England.

Mr. John Patten: At 30 September 1983 there were 14,718 (whole-time equivalent) medical laboratory scientific officers employed in the National Health Service in England. Of these, 89 were principal medical laboratory scientific officers.

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many physicists, biochemists and clinical psychologists are employed by the National Health Service in England; and, of each group, how many are in the top grade.

Mr. John Patten: Staff in post in England at 30 September 1983 (whole-time equivalent) were as follows:

	Total	Top grade staff*
Physicists	662	44
Biochemists	1,289	82
Clinical Psychologists	1,307	72

* included in total.

Private Nursing Homes

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give, for each year since 1970, the total amount of public money going into private nursing homes through (a) the social security system, (b) health authority contractual arrangements and (c) any other sources, giving estimates where necessary.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Information in the form requested is not available.

Human Organs

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what controls or monitoring his Department exercises over the origins of human organs imported into the United Kingdom.

Mr. John Patten: The United Kingdom transplant service (UKTS) participates in a number of international schemes for the exchange of cadaver kidneys for transplantation, principally in order to meet the needs of the small number of NHS patients who are able to receive only an almost identically matched kidney or who are of a rare blood group. A number of cadaver kidneys are also imported from the United States for transplantation into private patients; private hospitals are not obliged to make importation arrangements through UKTS, bu do so in most cases. All foreign agencies involved in these exchanges are reputable non-profit-making organisations. Some cadaver hearts and livers are also imported for transplantation in NHS hospitals, and arrangements may be made either through UKTS or directly between the medical staff of the donor and recipient hospitals. UKTS maintains full information on the origins of all organs for which it makes the importation arrangements and we would expect similar information to be maintained in every instance by the recipient hospital.

Drug Addicts

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what National Health Service facilities are available in each of the Birmingham health authority districts for the treatment of drug addicts.

Mr. John Patten: The regional addiction unit at All Saints' hospital, West Birmingham, provides in patient and out patient facilities for the treatment of drug misusers from all the Birmingham districts. Drug misusers may also be seen by primary health care teams or the general psychiatric services. Information on service provision and plans for its expansion is set out in the report "Drug Misuse: Prevalence and Service Provision," copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether he will reinstate soluble paracetamol tablets on the limited list in the interests of patients who need a soluble preparation but who experience peptic problems from aspirin, even in soluble form;

(2) whether he will reinstate frisium capsules on the limited list in the interests of patients with mild anxiety states who do not require a heavy sedative and who need to drive a car.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We will shortly be setting up the committee that will review and maintain the selected list. The committee will be free to consider the clinical need for these or any other drugs. All benzodiapine sedatives and tranquillisers can affect driving ability and should carry warning labels pointing this out.

Hardship Hearings

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total number and average cost of hardship hearings during each of the past three years.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Tooth Decay

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what was the percentage proportion of children of different ages with known tooth decay in England and Wales over each of the last five years;

(2) what was the average number of teeth with known tooth decay experienced by children in England and Wales over each of the last five years.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

NHS Buildings (Murals)

Mr. Sedgemore asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will bring forward plans to encourage the painting of murals in hospitals and other National Health Service buildings;

(2) if he will bring forward plans to preserve existing murals in hospitals and other National Health Service buildings;

(3) if he will bring forward legislation prohibiting the further destruction by district health authorities in paintings on National Health Service property which contain nudes;

(4) if he will issue guidelines to district health authorities calling on them to consult the Minister for the Arts before they consider destroying paintings.

Mr. John Patten: We recognise the value of murals and other works of art in contributing to the internal environment of hospitals and other health buildings. The Department organised a conference at the King's Fund Centre in 1983 and has subsequently produced two publications, "Art in the NHS" and "The Arts in a Health District." I am placing copies of these in the Library. Decisions to display or to remove works of art are properly a matter for individual regional and district health authorities. Legislation would be quite inappropriate.

Mr. Sedgemore asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the cost to the National Health Service of the painting by the artist John Hewett of a nude Grecian mural at St. Bartholomew's hospital and its subsequent destruction by whitewash.

Mr. John Patten: We do not collect this sort of information about local matters. The hon. Member may wish to approach City and Hackney health authority for this information.

Unpasteurised Milk

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of cases of sickness resulting from the consumption of unpasteurised milk in each of the last five years.

Mr. John Patten: The numbers of cases of sickness in England and Wales which were reported to the communicable diseases surveillance centre and attributed to the consumption of unpasteurised milk were:

	Number
1980	210
1981	294
1982	*1,012
1983	283
1984	403

* includes approximately 400 cases resulting from a failure in the pasteurisation process.

Housing Benefit

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide the latest available estimates of the total numbers of recipients of standard housing benefits, divided between rate assistance and rent assistance; how many in each category have income above and below the needs allowance; if he will give the current year and full year estimates of the expenditure saving due to the increase in the rate taper to 13p and estimate the number of claimants who will be adversely affected by the taper increase without taking account of the increase in the child needs allowance; how many of these losers will lose eligibility to rate rebates altogether; and if he will as far as possible break the above estimates down as between pensioners, working householders and others.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide his best estimates of the number of Scottish households, including the number of pensioners, who will lose (a) up to £1, (b) between £1 and £2 and (c) £3 and more in rates help as a result of the proposed changes in the rates taper; and how many households will lose housing benefit altogether.

Mr. Newton: Breakdowns of the estimates of the effects of the proposed increase in the housing benefit rates taper above the needs allowance and the real improvement in the dependent child addition to the needs allowance this November, are not available separately for Scottish households. It is estimated that 460,000 households in Great Britain will no longer receive rate rebate from November following these changes.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement as to the date by which he expects to have achieved savings of £500 million in housing benefit.

Mr. Newton: The figure of £500 million indicates the order of magnitude of the amount by which we think it reasonable, over a period, to reduce housing benefit expenditure compared with likely expenditure under existing entitlement rules.

Chemists

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services to what extent pharmacists were represented in the negotiations which he has had with the pharmaceutical services negotiating committee about the future of high street chemists.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Successive Governments and the pharmacist profession have for many years recognised the pharmaceutical services negotiating committee as the body representative of all pharmacies in contract with the National Health Service.

The committee's constitution provides for 25 registered pharmacists engaged in part II pharmaceutical services made up as follows:

Fourteen chemist contractors elected from each NHS region in England.

One chemist contractor elected from Wales.

Five chemist contractors nominated by the board of management of the National Pharmaceutical Association.

Four registered pharmacists nominated by the Company Chemists Association.

One registered pharmacist nominated by the Co-operative Wholesale Society.

The negotiations were therefore conducted with the representatives of all pharmacy contractors both large and small.

Pensions

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received advocating increasing the level of weekly pension payments to single pensioners and pensioner couples in line with prices and inflation rather than with earnings during the next two financial years.

Mr. Whitney: None.

Family Credit Allowance

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what factors he will take into account when deciding on the mechanism for calculating the sum in the proposed family credit allowance to cover the cost of school meals.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 17 June at columns 42-43. If he has views on the factors which he considers ought to be taken into account in calculating the relevant sum, we are very willing to consider them.

Benefits

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the savings he estimates he will achieve in a full year based in current benefit levels from (a) withdrawing central heating additions, (b) changing the rates taper for housing benefit and (c) uprating child benefit by less than the inflation rate; and how he calculates his figures for total savings from the uprating statement.

Mr. Newton: The savings for a full year (1986-87) are as follows:

	£ million
Uprating child benefit to £7 (compared with 7 per cent. uprating)	175
Ending new awards of central heating additions	38
Increasing rates taper for housing benefit	57
Total	270

Offsetting costs, from the real improvement in family income supplement, the extension of automatic heating additions to sick and disabled householders on the long-term rate of supplementary benefit, and the real increase in the housing benefit children's needs allowance, reduce the total savings to about £250 million.

Widow's Allowance

Mr. Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if it remains his policy to preserve the real value of the widow's allowance.

Mr. Newton: Under section 125 of the Social Security Act 1975 the Secretary of State has a duty to uprate widow's allowance annually in line with the rise in prices. The Government stand by their pledge to protect widow's allowance — along with retirement pension and linked long-term benefits—against inflation.

Adoption

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of applications made since May 1984 to free a child for adoption, under section 14 of the Children Act 1975; what is the number of freeing orders granted; and what is the number of applications where parents withheld their consent.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is not yet available.

Drug Rehabilitation Centres (East Berkshire)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has received any applications for grants from drug rehabilitation centres in east Berkshire.

Mr. John Patten: No.

Drug Abuse (East Berkshire)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many patients have been admitted to hospitals in the east Berkshire health authority area, suffering from drug abuse or drug-related problems for those people aged (a) under 25 years, (b) 25 to 45 years and (c) over 45 years in each of the last five years.

Mr. John Patten: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Drug Abuse (Slough)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has received any representations from voluntary groups in Slough regarding drug and solvent abuse among young people.

Mr. John Patten: No.

Benefits (Slough)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people under the age of 30 years are in receipt of supplementary benefit in the Slough travel-to-work area.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people in Slough have been in receipt of (a) housing benefit, (b) sickness benefit, (c) invalidity benefit and (d) family income supplement for each of the last three years.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that information relating to sickness benefit, invalidity benefit and family income supplement is not available for the Slough area. Information based on Slough borough council's housing benefit subsidy claims indicates that the number of rate rebate recipients are as follows:

	Number
1983-84	10,800
1984-85	11,200
1985-86	9,850

Mentally Handicapped Persons

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list by regional health authority the amount of funding which is transferred from one health district to another when a mentally handicapped person is transferred from hospital into the community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not expect funds to transfer when responsibility for services for mentally handicapped people transfers from one authority to another. However, detailed arrangements for funding transfers from hospitals to the community and actual amounts are a matter for regional health authorities to determine in consultation with their districts. Arrangements vary to suit local circumstances and we do not collect full details centrally.

Alcohol Misuse.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer of 18 June, Official Report, column 117, relating to expenditure on activity concerning alcohol misuse, if he will indicate the basis upon which the figure of £400,000 for 1985-86 has been calculated; how this compares with the basis used for calculating the figures in the table of expenditure for the years 1979-80 to 1984-85; and if he will indicate the price base used for each set of figures.

Mr. John Patten: As requested, the figure of £400,000 was expressed at 1985 pay and price levels and the figures for the previous years were actual expenditures. Converted to 1985 pay and price levels they are:

1979-80	37,436
1980-81	286,223
1981-82	236,081
1982-83	298,339
1983-84	335,375
1984-85	203,561

Redundant Workers

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will withdraw the regulations which require that unemployment benefit shall be refused to any applicant who has accepted redundancy as part of a national industrial arrangement;

(2) if unemployment benefit will be paid to miners who have accepted redundancy under the terms of the national arrangements in the coal industry.

Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent instructions have been issued to unemployment benefit offices regarding the eligibility for unemployment benefit of workers who accept voluntary redundancy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on his policy towards the payment of full unemployment benefit, including for the first six weeks, to redundant miners.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his replies, 20 June 1985, c. 198 and 21 June 1985, c. 255]: Section 20(1)(a) of the Social Security Act 1975 provides that a person shall be disqualified for receiving unemployment benefit for a period not exceeding six weeks if he has voluntarily left his employment without just cause. Decisions on individual claims are a matter for the independent adjudicating authorities and adjudication officers apply the statute law and case law in the light of advice and guidance given by the Chief Adjudication Officer. The latter has recently issued new guidance, based on case law, to the effect that those who have volunteered for redundancy should be considered to have left their employment voluntarily, and should not generally, in the absence of other pressing circumstances, be held to have shown just cause, so that disqualification under section 20(1)(a) should be considered.

We have given careful and urgent consideration to this new guidance on the interpretation of section 20(1)(a) and have concluded that the section should be amended to maintain our policy that those who are redundant should not be regarded as having left employment voluntarily, even though they may have volunteered or agreed to be dismissed by reason of redundancy. My noble Friend has therefore tabled an appropriate new clause to the current Social Security Bill.

We are arranging for extra-statutory payments to be made to any claimant who loses benefit for this reason before the Bill is enacted.

Breast Cancer

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the incidence and trend of breast cancer in women; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 11 June 1985, c. 437-38]: The figures should have read as follows:

There were 13,277 deaths (520·27 per million female population) from breast cancer in England and Wales in 1984, and 21,164 (830·80 per million female population) registrations reported to cancer registries in 1981.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 25th June 1985

PRIME MINISTER

Israeli Prime Minister (Visit)

Q28. Mr. Latham asked the Prime Minister what progress has been made in fixing a date for an official visit to the United Kingdom by the Prime Minister of Israel, Mr. Shimon Peres.

The Prime Minister: As I said in my reply of 22 January 1985, at columns 371-72 to my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Bruinvels), the Israeli Prime Minister has accepted an invitation to pay an official visit to Britain. Dates are now being considered, and an announcement will be made at the appropriate time.

General Belgrano

Q92. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister when she first learnt to whom the oiler accompanying the General Belgrano belonged.

The Prime Minister: So far as I can recall, in March 1984, as the hon. Member will no doubt recall, it is referred to in my letter to the right hon. Member for Llanelli (Mr. Davies) of 4 April 1984 published in the Official Report on 13 April at column 383.

European Union

Q108. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Prime Minister if the proposals on European Union are to be discussed at the Council of Ministers meeting at Milan; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: A number of proposals have been put forward. We believe the European Council will concentrate on practical proposals for reform, including the ideas we have put forward for completing the common market, strengthening political co-operation and improving the Community's decision-taking ability.

Engagements

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 25 June.

Mr. Leigh asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 25 June.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 25 June.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I hope to have an audience of Her Majesty the Queen.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Ethiopia and Sudan

Mr. Ottaway asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of United Kingdom and European Community aid to Ethiopia and Sudan is dedicated to population control policies.

Mr. Raison: None of our bilateral aid to Ethiopia and the Sudan is directed at population related activities. Nor, we have been advised by the European Commission, is the European Community's aid to those countries. We do, however, provide financial assistance to the United Nations Fund for Population Activities and the International Planned Parenthood Federation, both of which have programmes in Ethiopia. The UNFPA also has a programme in the Sudan.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Evidential Breath Testing

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish the report by the forensic science service on evidential breath testing; what conclusions he has reached on the basis of his consideration of the report; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Brittan: The Home Office forensic science report on the monitoring of the Lion intoximeter and Camic breath analyser evidential breath testing machines is being published today, together with a foreword by the independent scrutineer, Sir William Paton, and subsequent correspondence I have had with him. Copies have been placed in the Library.

It is clear in the light of this report that both types of instrument and their procedures are fundamentally acceptable in the sense of not placing subjects unjustly in jeopardy. We therefore intend to continue to use them as the principal means of assessing for evidential purposes whether a person's capacity to drive is impaired by alcohol to an extent which justifies criminal proceedings.

The report finds that a fault in the acetone detector in the Lion intoximeter leads to under-estimation of the level of alcohol in occasional cases. This fault may result in a motorist who is in fact over the legal limit escaping prosecution, but not to a motorist who is below the limit being prosecuted. The report also finds that in a few cases there were large differences between individual breath sample results within a pair of breath samples. Some of these large differences appeared to be associated with the malfunctioning of the acetone detector. We accept the report's recommendation that where this difference exceeds a prescribed amount a blood or urine test should be substituted.

We will make arrangements for the evidential breath testing instruments in use by the police to be modified to take account of both these findings.

The use of these machines enables many more drink-drive offenders to be dealt with quickly and the report makes it clear that the machines deserve public support, in the interests of road safety. Pending the findings of Sir William Paton's study, the blood-urine test has remained an option. The numbers of those who take this option have steadily declined and the latest figure available (March 1985) shows a take up rate of 16 per cent.

I think it right to allow the option to continue for a while longer, but I am not convinced that there is a long-term case for retaining it and I intend to review the position in 12 months time with a view to withdrawing the non-statutory option.

Prisoners (Injuries)

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have sustained injuries whilst attending courts in the custody of prison officers during the last six months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Where prisoners receive injuries in the course of incidents involving other prisoners or staff a report is submitted to prison department headquarters, which is followed up if any grounds for concern are revealed. Collation of statistics of the kind requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Thorp Arch Remand Centre

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what alternatives he considered for the future of Thorp Arch remand centre other than its conversion to a category C prison.

Mr. Mellor: Other options considered included the retention of Thorp Arch as a remand centre, its conversion to a youth custody centre and its conversion to an establishment for prisoners segregated for their own protection.

Car Tracking Devices

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the policy of the Metropolitan police towards the use of car tracking devices; on how many occasions in each of the last three years such devices have been affixed by the police to cars they wish to put under surveillance; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will call for a report from the appropriate chief officer of police about the use of a car tracking device in investigations preceding the prosecution of Mr. Colin King, recently acquitted at the Old Bailey, as to what rank of officer authorised the use of the device in this case, his name, the basis on which use was authorised and as to the rank of the officer in the force concerned who usually authorises such surveillance activities; and if he will make a statement on the substance of the report.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I am assured by the Commissioner that the use of surveillance devices by the Metropolitan police is authorised strictly in accordance with the relevant Home Office guidelines. The current Home Office guidelines on the use of equipment in police surveillance operations were issued on 19 December 1984, replacing those issued in 1977. Copies of both documents are in the Library. Under both the 1977 and 1984 guidelines, the use of tracking equipment requires, in the Metropolitan police, the authority of an assistant commissioner, or, if used with the consent of the owner of the vehicle concerned, a deputy assistant commissioner or commander.

It would not be appropriate to give information about the use of surveillance devices in particular criminal investigations, nor, as I made clear when the 1984 guidelines were published on 19 December 1984, at columns 152-58, would it be in the interests of the prevention and detection of crime for detailed information to be made public on the scale of use of particular kinds of surveillance devices in criminal investigations.

Police National Computer (Vehicle Checks)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of entries in the seen or checked in noteworthy circumstances sub-category of the stolen and suspect vehicle index of the police national computer at the beginning of the miners' strike of 1984; and what was the maximum number recorded in that sub-category during the period of the miners' strike.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The number of entries in the seen or checked in noteworthy circumstances sub-category of the stolen and suspect vehicle index of the police national computer at the beginning of the miners' dispute was 8,402. Over the period of the dispute the number of entries fluctuated between a low of 7,383 in August 1984 and a maximum of 12,285 in February 1985. It stood at 11,647 on 1 June 1985. Vehicles entered on this file are regularly weeded after 14 days.

Inquiries made of all police forces in December 1984 revealed that five forces had at some stage used the stolen and suspect vehicle index in connection with the miners' dispute, but at the time of the inquiries there were only 25 current entries.

Dog Fights (Leicestershire)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of (a) prosecutions and (b) convictions for offences relating to dog fights in Leicestershire for each of the last three years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Information collected centrally does not distinguish offences relating to dog fights from other offences under the Protection of Animals Act 1911.

Savernake Forest (Police Activity)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for reports from the chief constable of Wiltshire as to how many police have been involved in police activity in Savernake Forest recently.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given to his questions on 24 June, at columns 286-87.

Immigration

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many applications for entry clearance from (a) wives and children and (b) husbands and fiancés were referred or deferred for enquiries at each post in the Indian sub-continent for each year since 1977;

(2) how many applications from (a) husbands and (b) fiancés have been (i) decided, (ii) granted and (iii) refused in the Indian sub-continent in each quarter of 1984; how many such applications in each category and for each quarter were refused (1) wholly and (2) partly because of the primary purpose rule; what was the refusal rate in each instance and what percentage of these refusals was (x) wholly and (y) partly on primary purpose grounds; and if he will publish this information for each post.

Mr. Mellor: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Scrap Metal Dealers

Mr. Lord asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are convicted annually of offences under the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 1964.

Mr. Mellor: The information available to me, which may be incomplete, is given in the table:

Persons found guilty of offences under the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 1964

England and Wales Year	Number of persons found guilty
1979	48

Mr. Lord asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the number of people who are now registered scrap metal dealers.

Mr. Butcher: I have been asked to reply.
I regret the information is not available.

Closed Circuit Television Cameras

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many closed circuit television cameras the Metropolitan police have for the surveillance of people in public places; how many of these are permanently fixed; where each one is located; how many of the overall total are located within the Lambeth District; how many of the Lambeth cameras are permanently fixed; and where each of them is sited.

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to his reply, 12 June 1985, c. 449]: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that, in addition to closed circuit television equipment used to protect buildings, and for criminal investigation purposes, the Metropolitan police have six permanently sited closed circuit television cameras which are used to assist in the operational control of public order events and to monitor traffic. These are located in Whitehall, Parliament square, Trafalgar square, Hyde Park corner, Marble Arch and Oxford Circus. There are also 10 mobile cameras held centrally for temporary use in public order events throughout the Metropolitan police district as required.

In addition the metropolitan police have access to 63 fixed cameras at various locations belonging to the Greater London council which they use for monitoring and regulating traffic. Three of these are situated in the Lambeth police district at the junctions between Lambeth road and Albert embankment, Vauxhall bridge and Albert embankment and Baylis road and Westminster Bridge road.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Mr. C. Roberts (Speech)

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will arrange for the text of the speech made by Mr. C. Roberts of the British Overseas Trade Board to the British South African Trade Association in Cape Town in March 1985 to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Channon: I have already done so. Mr. Roberts is an official of the Department of Trade and Industry and his speech was approved in advance by Ministers.

Amaro Ltd.

Mr. Dickens asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when Amaro Ltd. of Horsham, West Sussex, last deposited its accounts at Companies House; and for how long the company has been registered in England as No. 189 1900.

Mr. Fletcher: Amaro Ltd. was incorporated on 4 March 1985. No accounts have been delivered, nor are they yet due.

Limited Companies

Mr. Dickens asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he is satisfied with the structure and safeguards for the public, in the formation of limited companies in the United Kingdom where directors and nominated shareholders are resident overseas and subject to a different legal framework; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Scrap Metal

Mr. Lord asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many collection sites for scrap metal are presently being used nationwide.

Mr. Butcher: I regret that this information is not available.

Mr. Lord asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the value of the scrap metal brought into collection sites annually.

Mr. Butcher: The value of scrap metal purchased by merchants in 1984 is estimated by the British Scrap Federation to be £600 million.

Silver Plate (Exports)

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give the amount of imports to the United Kingdom from EEC countries for electro nickel plated silver for the last five years for which figures are available; and whether there are any restrictions on exports of electro nickel plated silver from the United Kingdom to EEC countries.

Mr. Fletcher: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

School Buildings

16. Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he is satisfied that local education authorities have sufficient resources to renovate and maintain school buildings.

Sir Keith Joseph: I should like to see an improvement by many local education authorities in their level of expenditure on the repair and maintenance of school buildings. If costs are contained and savings made elsewhere there should be scope in the current financial year for some improvement in expenditure per pupil in many authorities on reapirs and maintenance.

Remuneration of Teachers Act

17. Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will seek to repeal the Remuneration of Teachers Act.

Sir Keith Joseph: I am prepared to listen to the arguments for change and that is why I met representatives of the local authority associations at their request in March. At that meeting they made plain their dissatisfaction with the present machinery and I repeated my readiness to consider the case for a change. I now await the submission of a written case; before coming to a firm view on the matter I would want to be satisfied that any new arrangements would offer the prospect of being a real improvement on the present ones. The Scots have different machinery yet very similar problems.

School Meals

18. Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many school children are now in receipt of free meals at school compared to 1978-79.

Mr. Dunn: In October 1984, which is the latest date for which figures are available, 1,147,886 children in England were receiving free school meals on the day of the school meals census. The figure for October 1978 census was 1,074,066.

St. Aidan's School, Bamber Bridge

19. Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to make a decision on the future of St. Aidan's Church of England primary school in Bamber Bridge.

Mr. Dunn: My hon. Friend will by now have received my letter to him explaining that my right hon. Friend has decided that he cannot grant the order requested by Lancashire to transfer this school to a new site.

Hay Fever

20. Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received recently about the effects of hay fever on children taking examinations.

Mr. Dunn: Two parents of examination candidates have written to the Department about this in recent weeks.

Higher Education

21. Mr. Foster asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the Green Paper, "The Development of Higher Education into the 1990s".

28. Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received following publication of the Green Paper on higher education; and if he will make a statement.

30. Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what response he has received from the universities about his Green Paper on higher education.

32. Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the Green Paper, "The Development of Higher Education into the 1990s, Cmnd. 9524".

48. Mr. Stan Thorne asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the Green Paper, "The Development of Higher Education into the 1990s".

51. Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received on the Green Paper, "The Development of Higher Education into the 1990s".

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the Green Paper, "The Development of Higher Education into the 1990s".

Mr. Brooke: My right hon. Friend is beginning to receive representations on the issues raised in Cmnd. 9524. Such representations will be taken into account in the further formulation of policy for the future development of higher education: the Government hope to be able to make a further statement of their intentions in 1986.

Local Authority Expenditure

22. Mr. Jim Callaghan asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about Her Majesty's Inspector's report, "Local Authority Expenditure Policies on Education Provision in England—1984".

27. Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about Her Majesty's Inspectors' report, "Local Authority Expenditure Policies on Education Provision in England—1984".

37. Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about Her Majesty's Inspectors' report, "Local Authority Expenditure Policies on Education Provision in England—1984".

49. Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about Her Majesty's Inspectors' report, "Local Authority Expenditure Policies on Education Provision in England—1984".

Sir Keith Jospeh: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Manchester, Blackley (Mr. Eastham).

Teachers (Dispute)

23. Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he next plans to meet representatives of the Association of County Councils to discuss the teachers' pay dispute.

Sir Keith Joseph: I shall be meeting representatives of the Association with an observer from the Association of Metropolitan Authorities on 1 July 1985. This will complement a meeting which I held with representatives of the Association of Metropolitan Authorities which an observer from the Association of County Councils.

24. Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on the current position in the teachers' pay dispute.

44. Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the teachers' dispute.

56. Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the current situation in the teachers' strike.

58. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to resolve the teachers' pay dispute.

Sir Keith Joseph: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friends the Members for Harborough (Sir J. Farr), for Wokingham (Sir van Straubenezee), and for Christchurch (Mr. Adley), the hon. Member for Greenwich (Mr. Barnet) and my hon. Friend the Member for Billericay (Mr. Proctor).

41. Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will now initiate discussions with the trade unions concerned to seek to resolve the teachers' dispute.

Sir Keith Joseph: I offered to meet the teacher unions along with the employers on 9 May, to discuss pay matters. In the event the unions did not attend. I have also made clear my willingness to discuss with them my 21 May letter to employers about the possibility of additional funding for next year. So far only the Secondary Heads Association has indicated a wish to meet on that basis. The union majority instead pursues an unrealistic claim for a 1985 settlement.

50. Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science, if he will make more funds available to end the industrial dispute of the teachers.

Sir Keith Joseph: I undertook last July to seek extra resources for an acceptable and affordable reform of the teachers' salary structure, the clearer definition of teachers' duties and responsibilities and the introduction of performance appraisal. But no agreed proposals have come forward and teachers' pay for 1985-86 must be accommodated within the resources available to local education authorities. Last month I made public that additional resources would be available for teachers' pay next year if agreement in principle can be reached by October on a reform of the current pay system designed to help achieve the Government's educational objectives and to provide improved promotion opportunities for good teachers.

Mathematics

25. Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the teaching of mathematics in schools.

Mr. Dunn: The Government are continuing to encourage improvements in mathematics education in schools in line with the recommendations of the Cockcroft committee. Developments at the local level will be encouraged by the appointment from September of this year of some 350 advisory staff funded through education support grant.

National Union of Teachers

26. Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met the general secretary of the National Union of Teachers; and what was discussed.

Sir Keith Joseph: I last met the general secretary of the National Union of Teachers on 21 January 1985 to discuss teacher appraisal.

Science and Mathematics Teachers

29. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if there is still a shortage of suitably qualified science and mathematics teachers.

Mr. Dunn: There continues to be a shortage of teachers who are qualified to teach mathematics and the physical sciences and available for employment in maintained schools. The Government's plans for initial teacher training provide for an expansion in places for secondary training in these subjects to help meet the projected demands of schools into the next decade. We would also like to see more students with a background in mathematics and science entering primary teaching.

Teacher Training (Plymouth)

31. Mr. Hicks asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many representations he has received expressing concern about the proposals to terminate initial teacher training at the College of St. Mark and St. John, Plymouth; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: My right hon. Friend has received some 80 representations concerning the proposal currently under consideration by the National Advisory Body for Public Sector Higher Education regarding the future of initial teacher training at the college of St. Mark and St. John, Plymouth. I cannot anticipate what advice the NAB will submit on the distribution of initial teacher training intakes between public sector institutions from 1986, but in reaching decisions my right hon. Friend will wish to give careful consideration to the representations made to him concerning individual institutions.

School Leaving Age

33. Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to review the school leaving age.

52. Mr. Cyril Smith asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to alter the statutory school leaving age.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has no such plans.

Drugs

34. Mr. Loyden asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he intends to take to tackle the educational aspects of the problem of drugs in schools.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has announced a number of relevant measures in recent months.

—the Department has prepared a booklet of general advice on the question of the misuse of drugs for the use of teachers and others in the education service. This will be distributed through local education authorities in the near future;

—among other projects in this field, the Department has commissioned, through the agency of the Health Education Council, the preparation of a range of curricular and teaching materials which will be of use to educational planners, teachers and those concerned with teacher training;

—drug misuse has been identified as an area for attention with the Education Support Grant programme for 1986-87 and grant to support activities costing up to £2 million will be available for the appointment of staff by local education authorities to promote and co-ordinate local programmes of action aimed at drug misuse. The funding available will be sufficient to enable each local education authority to take action along these lines.

Student Grants

35. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the representations he has had about the level of student grants.

Mr. Brooke: The Department has received just under 12,000 representations about the level of grants for 1985-86.

Open University

36. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he proposes to take to reduce the waiting lists for Open University places.

Sir Keith Joseph: The Open University is responsible for determining the number of students it admits. Its broad policy is to accept new students in order of application. Students who cannot be offered a place in one year are offered places in the next. No student has to wait more than one year to be admitted.

Student Maintenance Grant

38. Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the change in real terms of the student maintenance grant between 1978-79 and 1985-86.

Mr. Brooke: The information for 1985-86 is not yet available. Such calculations are based on the retail price index at September of the year of entry. The rate of grant in 1984-85 was worth 91 per cent. of its 1978-79 level.

Textile Industry

39. Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on the number of higher and further education establishments which run courses related to the textile industry.

Sir Keith Joseph: Twelve higher and further education establishments in England run courses in textile technology and related subjects. The courses range from degrees at universities and polytechnics to craft level and YTS courses in technical colleges. Textile technology also forms an element of many art and design courses.

Agricultural and Food Research Council

40. Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met the chairman of the Agricultural and Food Research Council; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Brooke: My right hon. Friend met the current chairman of the Agricultural and Food Research Council in November 1982 to discuss the implications of the advice of the advisory board for the research councils that the AFRC's share of the science budget should be reduced after 1983-84.

University Grants Committee

42. Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has met the chairman of the University Grants Committee since the publication of the Green Paper on higher education.

Mr. Brooke: No.

Special Education Needs

43. Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he is satisfied that the number of non-teaching assistants in schools is enough to enable sufficient children with special needs to be educated in normal schools.

Mr. Dunn: The responsibility for ensuring that a sufficient number of non-teaching assistants is employed in schools lies with local education authorities. My right hon. Friend has no evidence to suggest that local education authorities are failing to meet this responsibility. Statistics on non-teaching assistants are not collected centrally.

Education Act 1981

45. Mr. Dormand asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he is satisfied with the progress being made in implementing the provisions of the Education Act 1981; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 22 January 1985 at column 844.

Foreign Students

46. Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the comparative figures between 1978-79 and 1984-85 for students from the Commonwealth, Latin America and the Middle East on courses in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Brooke: Information for 1984-85 is not yet available. The change up to 1983-84 has been as follows:

Students from abroad in higher and further education: Great Britain

Area	1978-79	1983-84	Percentage change
Commonwealth	44,600	28,600	−36
Latin America*	3,100	1,200	−61
Middle East†	16,700	7,600	−54

* Includes: Mexico, Guatemala, Belize, Honduras, El Salvador, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Panama, Colombia, Venezuela, Guyana, Surinam, French Guiana, Ecuador, Peru, Bolivia, Paraguay, Brazil, Uruguay, Chile, Argentina.

† Includes: Saudi Arabia, Iran, Iraq, Kuwait, Syrian Arab Republic, Jordan, Lebanon, Israel, Yemen Arab Republic, People's Democratic Republic of Yemen, Oman, United Arab Emirates, Qatar, Bahrain.

Local Authority Education Departments

47. Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of those employed by local authority education departments perform teaching duties.

Mr. Dunn: Joint manpower watch provisional figures for March 1985 show that teachers or lecturers were 59 per cent. of the total staff employed in local authority education in England. Separate figures are not available within the 59 per cent. of teachers and lecturers who are actually engaged on teaching duties.

Nursery Education

53. Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to increase the number of children in nursery education.

Mr. Dunn: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) on 19 April at column 291.

Teachers (Assessment)

54. Dr. Michael Clark asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has specific proposals for a scheme for teacher assessment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress he has made in his plans to introduce the regular assessment of teachers' performances; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph: I have invited views on a clarification of teachers' contractual duties which I believe should include a duty to take part in appraisal arrangements operated by the local education authorities. As announced in "Better Schools" (Cmnd. 9469), the Government propose to seek the power to require authorities regularly to appraise the performance of their teachers.

Grammar Schools

55. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will indicate the number of pupils who are attending grammar schools in those areas which still maintain a selective system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: In January 1984, the latest year for which firm figures are available, there were 175 grammar schools in England with 117,187 pupils.

Mandatory Awards Regulations

57. Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he proposes to lay the education mandatory awards regulations before the House.

Mr. Brooke: The Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations 1985 will be laid before Parliament by early August.

Teachers (Morale)

59. Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action he will take to secure an improvement in the morale of the teaching profession.

Sir Keith Joseph: I shall continue to try to increase public awareness of the importance and difficulty of the teacher's task, a task to which most teachers apply themselves with skill and dedication. The Government are seeking to assist them in that task through the policies outlined in "Better Schools" (Cmnd. 9469), including those for improving the quality of initial and in-service training. I shall continue to urge the teachers and their associations that the path to improved pay levels, greater regard from the general public and enhanced self-esteem within the profession lies in the reform of the current salary system to allow greater scope for the promotion of good classroom teachers, combined with a clearer definition of the teacher's duties to establish what can reasonably be expected of them and the introduction of performance appraisal to facilitate their professional and career development.

Religious Education

60. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to seek to ensure that religious education is taught in every school.

Mr. Dunn: We have made it clear that we look to local education authorities to ensure that the statutory requirements on the provision of religious instruction in maintained schools are met.

Pupil Expenditure

14. Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his latest estimate of the level of expenditure per school pupil in 1984-85.

Mr. Dunn: Local education authorities in England are estimated to spend an average of £890 per pupil in 1984-85, according to figures from the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy. The figure was estimated at 1983-84 prices.

Primary School Education

Mr. Freeman asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give figures showing the numbers of children entering primary school education in each of the past five years, and for 1975, in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) Northamptonshire.

Mr. Dunn: The Department does not collect information on pupils entering school. The numbers of pupils aged five years attending maintained primary schools in England and Northamptonshire for the years concerned were as follows:

January of each year	Northamptonshire	England
1975	8,461	702,975
1980	7,432	570,944
1981	7,015	540,893
1982	6,723	516,954
1983	6,403	495,738
1984	6,664	507,909

Information about schools in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland is the responsibility of my right hon. Friends for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland respectively.

Sixth Forms

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many pupils attend independent school sixth forms in England; and what proportion of the total number of sixth form pupils this represents.

Mr. Dunn: In January 1984, there were 66,738 pupils aged sixteen and over in independent schools. This represents 17 per cent. of all pupils of that age group in maintained secondary schools and independent schools.

Pupil-teacher Ratios

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the pupil-teacher ratios for Hampshire for 1984-85 for all maintained schools, primary and secondary.

Mr. Dunn: The latest information is for January 1984, when the pupil-teacher ratios within maintained primary and secondary schools in Hampshire were 24·0 and 17·1 respectively; the pupil-teacher ratio overall was 19·6.

Casterton Community College

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will review the minor works allocation which he has made to Leicestershire county council so as to make provision for an early improvement scheme at Casterton community college.

Mr. Dunn: The allocations of expenditure on county schools are block allocation which authorities are free to use as they see fit. Individual projects, major or minor, are not identified.

I understand that Leicestershire has not made provision from their 1985-86 allocation for improvement work at Casterton community college.

St. Francis Roman Catholic Primary School, Melton Mowbray

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what provision he made within the minor works programme in Leicestershire for voluntary aided schools, and specially for St. Francis Roman Catholic primary school, Melton Mowbray.

Mr. Dunn: Leicestershire's minor works allocation for voluntary aided schools in 1985-86 was £40,000. The authority has not made provision from within this amount for any work at St. Francis Roman catholic primary school, Melton Mowbray in the current year.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science why he rejected the bid by Leicestershire county council for a basic need extension to Melton Mowbray St. Francis Roman Catholic (aided) primary school as a major project for 1985-86; and whether he will now reinstate it.

Mr. Dunn: Additional school places qualify as basic need provision where they meet the needs of population growth. Forecasts of population growth in the area served by St. Francis's school were not sufficiently firm to qualify as basic need when the 1985-86 capital building allocation was made. There is no prospect of including an allocation for a project during the current year.

School Organisation

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what changes in school organisation are planned in the light of falling school rolls.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend gave notice in this year's public expenditure White Paper (Cmnd. 9428) that he intended to set local education authorities new targets for the removal of surplus school places beyond 1987, after consultation with the local authority associations. It is, however, for local education authorities, in consultation with the governors of voluntary schools, to determine whether the rationalisation of school provision in the light of the continuing fall in pupil numbers should be accompanied by any changes in the pattern of school organisation in their areas, and to publish proposals under sections 12-15 of the Education Act 1980 if these are required before any desired changes can be brought into effect.

Universities and Polytechnics (Commercial Activities)

Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy that universities and polytechnics should supplement their grant income by engaging in commercial activities.

Mr. Brooke: Sections 5 and 9 of the Green Paper on "The Development of Higher Education into the 1990s" (Cmnd. 9524) outlined the benefits to universities and polytechnics from closer involvement with business, including the opportunity to obtain more income from commercial activities. The Government recognised that the scope for supplementing grant income from business and private sources will vary from institution to institution. In addition the Government confirmed that resources for the universities were no longer based on the concept of a deficiency grant and that universities could therefore seek to maximise their income from sources other than the ratepayer or taxpayer without fear of consequential reduction in grant. For polytechnics and local authority colleges the Government have introduced legislation to remove the technical barriers which have hindered their earning income from business, and from the transfer of technology to business.

Medical Students

Dr. Mawhinney asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many medical students are planned to enter medical schools for the first time in October 1985.

Mr. Brooke: The target level for pre-clinical medical school intakes in Great Britain is 4,080. The provisional figure for the intake in October 1984 is 3,956. The intake in October 1985 can be expected to be similar and within the overall target.

Handicapped Children

Mr. St. John-Stevas asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received regarding the current level of provision in the education system for children with the dual disabilities of deafness and mental handicap; whether he has received any representations from organisations in the Chelmsford area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has received no such representations either from Chelmsford or from elsewhere.

Mr. St. John-Stevas asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many pupils with the dual disabilities of deafness and mental handicap are catered for by the education system; and what information he has as to how many such pupils there are in the Chelmsford area.

Mr. Dunn: These figures are not available centrally. My right hon. Friend may wish to approach the Essex local education authority about the number of such pupils in the Chelmsford area.

SCOTLAND

River Tay

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many objections have been received to the application for the River Tay protection order; and what is the total number of individual names appended to the objections.

Mr. John MacKay: Eighty-five objections have been received. The number of signatures appended to the objections, some of which were petition forms, was 931.

Forestry Grants

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the Forestry Commission's policy on retrospective applications for grant approval under the dedication and forestry grant schemes; and on how many occasions in the last 10 years such approval has been granted.

Mr. John MacKay: The rule in the Forestry Commission's grant schemes is that approval is not given retrospectively to planting applications. A very small number of exceptions have been made to this rule in circumstances where there has been a misunderstanding about planting approval, and where this has not been the fault of the applicant. Cases where applications had been approved retrospectively under the forestry grant scheme were listed in my reply of 17 June, at column 30, to the hon. Member for East Lothian (Mr. Home Robertson). Information on such cases under the commission's dedication schemes over the past 10 years is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mentally Handicapped People (Support)

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what amount was disbursed by his Department in support finance for the mentally handicapped in 1984-85; and what is the amount in the current financial year.

Mr. John MacKay: An estimated £2·8 million was spent by health boards in 1984-85 on support finance projects. A substantial proportion of this money was spent on projects for the mentally handicapped, but detailed information is not readily available centrally. I have indicated to health boards that I expect the overall level of expenditure on support finance in the current year to be around £6 million. Decisions on individual projects to be supported from Health Service resources are primarily for health boards.

Occupational Therapists

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many occupational therapists were in post in each health board area as at 30 September 1984; and if, for each area, he will give figures to show the population per therapist ratio.

Mr. John MacKay: The whole-time equivalent number of occupational therapists in post in each health board area at 30 September 1984 and the population per therapist ratio is shown in the table. The figures given relate to occupational therapists employed by health boards and take no account of those who are employed by local authorities but who also work in health related fields.

Health Board	Number of occupational therapists whole-time equivalent	Ratio per head of population

Industrial Production

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the increase, or otherwise, in (a) manufacturing output and (b) productivity in Scotland in 1984 compared with 1983; and how those figures compare with those for the United Kingdom.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Manufacturing output increased by 6 per cent. in Scotland in 1984 and productivity by 8·5 per cent. Broadly comparable figures for the United Kingdom were 3·4 per cent. and 4·8 per cent. respectively. Exact comparison is not possible since the Scottish output index is not adjusted for stock change, whereas the United Kingdom index is, and the Scottish figure for productivity does not take account of the self-employed, whereas the United Kingdom figure does.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Stationery

Mr. Corbett asked the Lord Privy Seal what are the quantities ordered, and prices paid, for the following House of Commons official envelopes in each of the last three years: pre-paid A4 code 145, pre-paid A5 code 143, green ensign A4 code 118, green ensign A5 code 119, white ensign A4 code 120, white ensign A5 code 121,and pre-paid Hansard size code 147.

Mr. Biffen: I am advised that the quantities of these envelopes ordered through HMSO in each of the last three years are as follows:

HMSO Code No.	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85
23-118	180,000	300,000	224,000
23-119	150,000	340,000	160,000
23-120	280,000	340,000	200,000
23-121	210,000	210,000	374,000
23-143	1,025,000	1,630,000	1,080,000
23-145	1,200,000	1,910,000	2,185,000
23-147	200,000	285,000	270,000

Information about the prices paid is commercial in confidence.

WALES

Health Advisory Service Report

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take steps to provide additional financial resources to the East Dyfed health authority, the Pembrokeshire health authority and the Dyfed county council to provide services for the elderly in the light of the report by the hospital advisory service and the social work service published on 7 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Since 1979-80 we have provided the health authorities in the county of Dyfed with over £10 million in revenue growth funds, a 19·1 per cent. increase, together with 26·7 per cent. of the growth funds available in that period for psychiatric development in Wales. Additionally, nearly £13·5 million has been allocated in Welsh Office support towards joint finance projects. The great majority of the health advisory service's report recommendations require action by the health and social services authorities in Dyfed, and I look forward to their considered response.

Sheep Annual Premium

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many farmers in Wales have been disqualified from claiming the sheep annual premium because their claim forms arrived 24 hours late at agricultural divisional offices after 10 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Thirty-three. Farmers had from 1 January to 10 April in which to claim sheep annual premium for 1985-86. Claims sent by first-class post and clearly posted in time for the last collection on 9 April have not been rejected on lateness grounds.

Psychiatric Provision

Mr. Hubbard-Miles asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has reached decisions on the provision of medium secure therapeutic psychiatric provision in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Yes. We received 35 replies to the policy appraisal which I announced on 14 June 1984 at column 528. Most were strongly in favour of proceeding along the lines of our proposals. A case was made, however, for a slightly larger unit in south-east Wales to facilitate essential staff training and research. My right hon. Friend has therefore decided that 65 beds should be provided for Wales in three 15-bedded units and one 20-bedded unit. These will be built on the sites of existing psychiatric hospitals.

My right hon. Friend will decide the specific sites for the units following a full option appraisal and further public consultation. However, we expect there to be two units in south-east Wales, one in west Wales and the other in north Wales. They will be constructed over a six-year period beginning in 1986-87 with two to be built initially, one of which will be the 20-bed unit. The cost of building the four units will be about £3·1 million, with annual running costs of about £1·6 million once all four are operational.

ENERGY

Onshore Licensing

Mr. Portillo asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he will make an announcement about onshore licensing arrangements.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith [pursuant to his reply, 23 May 1985, c. 536]: I have today placed in the Libraries of both Houses copies of the text of a notice announcing the invitation to apply for exploration licences in the first onshore round. The notice, which is to be published on July 2 in the official gazettes, also details the arrangements for application for appraisal and development licences, and sets out the terms and conditions for all licences. The dates for submission of applications for exploration licences are 24 and 25 September, 1985.

There is no question of my allowing onshore oil and gas exploration and production at any price. I seek a balance between national and local interests, between commercial and environmental. I will not allow a single well to be drilled onshore until the full rigour of local planning law has been exercised and until I am satisfied that all the consultations enforced by the new arrangements are completed satisfactorily.

For estuarial areas where planning laws do not apply, I have imposed stringent conditions — control over choice of drill sites, seasonal restrictions on drilling, and proof of ability to respond immediately and effectively to any oil spill. In addition licensees must consult with local authorities, the Nature Conservancy Council, local fishery committees, and port authorities.

And, should exploration and appraisal be successful in licensed estuarial areas, any development plan will be subject to detailed consideration involving all interested parties. This examination will be co-ordinated and fully evaluated by the Department of the Environment before a decision is taken to allow the development to go ahead.

TRANSPORT

London Underground (Investment)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals London Regional Transport has submitted to him for approval regarding major investment in the Central line; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: LRT has not so far submitted any major investment projects solely connected with the Central line for the Secretary of State's approval. The signalling equipment and the rolling stock are due to be renewed in the early 1990s. The Government have provided financial assistance towards the development of prototypes of a new generation of rolling stock, which LRT will test in public service.

Heathrow Airport (Rail Link)

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report details of any appraisals of the current cost of constructing a main line rail link from London into Heathrow which were taken into account in formulating paragraph 5.16 of the White Paper on "Airports Policy", relating to surface access.

Mr. David Mitchell: There have been no detailed appraisals of the cost of a main line rail link to Heathrow; that is why we are commissioning a study of the options for improving surface access to Heathrow, including possible rail links. All the existing materials on the costs of rail links was made available at the inquiry and summarised by the inspector in his report.

Air Services

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will seek to extend the progress made in negotiating liberal aviation arrangements within the European Economic Community to include countries outside Europe and in particular Singapore; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: As was made clear in the White Paper on airports policy, (Cmnd. 9542), the Government will encourage the liberalisation of air services wherever foreign competition is fair and British interests are not prejudiced. However, international aviation on long-haul routes remains heavily regulated, and in these circumstances increased access by foreign airlines to the United Kingdom must be balanced by parallel improvements in access, of equivalent value, for United Kingdom airlines to that country.

This policy will continue to be applied in our air services arrangements with Singapore.

Mr. Arnold asked the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate is available to him of (a) potential passenger traffic to Singapore and beyond from Manchester, (b) the number of passengers to Singapore and beyond from the north who currently fly from London and (c) the number of passengers from the north who currently interline to Amsterdam in order to pick up flights to Singapore and beyond.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The information available to me is as follows:

(a) Estimates of potential passenger demand from Manchester vary, but the demand to Singapore is probably in the region of 15,000 passengers per annum, with a similar demand to points beyond.

(b) Estimates suggest that up to 26,000 passengers per annum from the north-west, north and Yorkshire-Humberside planning regions travel through London with Singapore as their immediate or final destination.

(c) Reliable estimates of the numbers of passengers travelling to Singapore with only a transit stop in Amsterdam are not available.

Motorways (Noise Levels)

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a further statement on measures to reduce motorway noise.

Mrs. Chalker: I am very much aware of the concern of my hon. Friend and others about the impact of new motorways on surrounding areas.

My Department's aim is, by careful selection of route and design, to minimise damage to the environment and especially the harmful effects of noise for people living nearby. Special landscaping and other measures are provided to give protection where noise would exceed specified levels. This may take the form of noise insulation of individual dwellings as provided by the Noise Insulation Regulations 1975, or noise barriers where they would be more economic and effective, or by a combination of methods, according to circumstances.

My hon. Friend will be aware of the extensive works undertaken on the M25 in his constituency and also that I have agreed to consider, without commitment, the possibility of further remedial works. This will be done as quickly as possible.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Transport how much revenue it is estimated was lost through evasion of road tax in England, Scotland and Wales in the financial year 1984-85.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The survey carried out for my Department last summer showed an annual loss of around £90 million through evasion in England, Scotland and Wales. The report on the survey was published on 18 December 1984 and a copy is available in the Library.

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is his best assessment of the number of civil servants involved in collecting road tax in England, Scotland and Wales.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Most vehicle excise duty is collected at post offices. In April 1985, 4,010 civil servants were employed in vehicle excise duty and vehicle registration work in England, Scotland and Wales; a specific allocation of staff to vehicle licensing work alone cannot readily be made.

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many road fund licences were issued in the financial year 1984-85 in England, Scotland and Wales.

Mr. Michael Spicer: 13·9 million 12-monthly and 14·9 million six monthly licences were issued in 1984-85.

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Transport how much revenue was raised by road tax in England, Scotland and Wales in the financial year 1984-85.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The net revenue from vehicle excise duty in 1984-85 was £2,091 million.

Liverpool Airport

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Transport who will be responsible for future debt repayments and running losses on Liverpool airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Local Government Bill provides that, if the districts within the present Merseyside county council can agree, the airport with its assets and liabilities will, on 1 April 1986, pass to them in accordance with their agreement. Otherwise it will pass, with its assets and liabilities, to the Merseyside joint transport authority.

Singapore Airlines

Mr. Thornton asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether within the framework of the new agreement allowing Singapore Airlines to provide flights to Manchester, he has any plans for further liberalisation of aviation arrangements between the United Kingdom and Singapore; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have no such plans.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Transport what evaluations his Department has carried out of the commercial and other benefits to Greater Manchester and the north of England of the opening of a new air service between Manchester and Singapore; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: The benefits and disbenefits of a particular service are difficult to evaluate, particularly in advance. I hope that the new service between Manchester and Singapore will benefit the economy of Greater Manchester and the north of England. However, I would in general expect services from regional airports by British Airlines to generate greater benefits than those by foreign airlines.

Trinity House Vessel

Mr. Sayeed asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about an order for the replacement of the Trinity House vessel Mermaid.

Mr. David Mitchell: Mermaid is 26 years old and her replacement has been under consideration for some time. My right hon. Friend has now agreed that Trinity House may place an order for a new vessel with Hyundai of Korea. The total cost, which will be met from the General Lighthouse Fund, is estimated at £9·6 million. This is about £5 million below the comparable UK price and cannot be matched by intervention fund support. My right hon. Friend noted, too, that 56 per cent. of the value of the content of the Hyundai vessel would be procured in the UK.

Accidents (A17)

Mr. Douglas Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, in respect of each year from 1970 to 1985, inclusive, he will list all personal injury accidents that have occurred on the A17 road within three quarters of a mile of Leadenham, stating (a) the date of the accident, (b) the number and nature of the vehicles involved and (c) the nature of the injuries sustained.

Mrs. Chalker: I regret that the information is not readily available. I shall write to my hon. Friend.

"Cycles on Trains"

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will have discussions with the chairman of British Rail about the contents of the research paper entitled "Cycles on Trains" commissioned by British Rail.

Mr. David Mitchell: The carriage of bicycles on trains is a matter for British Rail, but I should be happy to discuss this if the chairman wishes to raise the matter at one of our regular meetings.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Beaumont-Dark asked the Secretary of State for Transport how soon after abolition of the metropolitan county councils district councils will be able to secede from the proposed new public transport joint boards.

Mrs. Chalker: Where a district council can put forward a convincing case to secede from one of the new joint authorities, in principle the change ought to take place as soon as possible. I therefore hope very much that any district council which intends to make a case for early secession will do so quickly—subject to the passage of the Local Government Bill. If I receive a well substantiated case in the next few months, it will be my aim to complete consultations with other authorities as required by the relevant provisions of the Local Government Bill, so that a decision on secession can be taken before the expenditure level for the authority for 1987-88 is decided in July 1986. That would then allow time for such transfers as are needed to be arranged in good time for secession to take place on 1 April 1987.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agricultural Prices

Mr. Deakins asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the European Economic Community Commission has on any occasion reduced agricultural prices without the prior authority of the Council of Ministers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: The European Commission decided on 19 June 1985 that, in the absence of decisions by the Council of Ministers on support prices for cereals and rapeseed for 1985-86, it would adopt precautionary measures to manage the markets for these commodities pending the Council's final decisions. The Commission has stated that these measures would include, broadly, the application of a reduction of 1·8 per cent. to the 1984-85 prices for these commodities.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Dog Licences and Sheep Worrying

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many dog licences were purchased in Northern Ireland in each of the last two years for which records are available;

(2) how many cases of sheep worrying in Northern Ireland were reported to the Royal Ulster Constabulary in each of the last two years;

(3) how many dog-owners in Northern Ireland were prosecuted in respect of sheep worrying in each of the last two years;

(4) how many dog-owners have been prosecuted in Northern Ireland as a result of action taken by dog wardens employed by district councils.

Dr. Boyson: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Penrith and The Border (Mr. Maclean) on 15 April, at columns 58-59. The information requested on sheep worrying is not readily available, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Local Enterprise Development Unit

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many staff have been employed by the Local Enterprise Development Unit in each of the last five years.

Dr. Boyson: The information is as follows:

	Number
1980	58
1981	59
1982	66
1983	83
1984	87

Terrorism (Anglo-Irish Co-operation)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what indications he has received from the Lord Chief Justice of Northern Ireland as to the policy of himself and other members of the Northern Ireland bench in the event of implementation of measures of co-operation between Her Majesty's Government and the Republic of Ireland currently under discussion and including participation of judges from the Republic of Ireland in trials of terrorist-type offences in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has sought the advice of the Lord Chief Justice of Northern Ireland on the practical implications for the judiciary of any proposal to enable judges from the Republic of Ireland to sit and participate in courts trying terrorist-type offences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Uganda

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will instruct the United Kingdom High Commissioner in Uganda to compile a report on the human rights situation in that country; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: The recent Amnesty International report, which we are studying with very grave concern, is an important supplement to the regular reports we already receive from our high commissioner.

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the substance of the report by Amnesty International on the current human rights situation in Uganda, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) on 24 June at column 318.

Recognition and Diplomatic Relations

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will list in the Official Report the countries which are not recognised by Her Majesty's Government;

(2) if he will list in the Official Report the countries with which Her Majesty's Government do not have diplomatic relations.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the right hon. Member for Strangford (Mr. Taylor) on 19 June 1985 at column 151.

Lebanon

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he made to the Lebanese or Syrian Governments about the recent massacres of Palestinian Arabs by Shi'ite Lebanese Arabs in the housing estates in the suburb of Beirut knows as Sabra and Chatilla; and whether the United Kingdom Ambassador at the United Nations asked for a meeting of the Security Council regarding these inter-communal Arab massacres.

Mr. Luce: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Isle of Wight (Mr. Ross) on 20 June at column 202.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the withdrawal of Israeli defence forces from Lebanon; and what communication Her Majesty's Government have had with the Government of Israel on this matter.

Mr. Luce: We condemned the Israeli invasion of Lebanon in 1982, and welcomed the Israeli Government's decision to end their occupation. We have made it clear to the Israeli Government that we look for the early and complete withdrawal of all Israeli forces from Lebanese territory.

Mr. George Habash (Press Conference)

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what report he has received from Her Majesty's ambassador in Kuwait about the press conference held there by George Habash, Secretary-General of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, rejecting the Hussein-Arafat agreement.

Mr. Luce: We are aware of statements made during his recent visit to the Gulf by Dr. Habash, Secretary-General of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine. His views have for a long time been out of line with those of the mainstream Palestine Liberation Organisation.

Libya

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if there are any plans to resume normal diplomatic relations with Libya; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: We have no plans to resume diplomatic relations with Libya. Since the meeting of British and Libyan officials held in Rome on 5 March, our exchanges with the Libyans have continued to be conducted through the respective protecting powers.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Argentina (International Debts)

Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if Her Majesty's Government are involved in or has been consulted about, current talks in the United States of America on downgrading the international debts of Argentina.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Dalyell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent payments have been made from the Contingency Fund in relation to the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Peter Rees: None.

Economic Policy

Mr. Redmond asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what criteria he uses in determining the relative priority in his economic policy of tax cuts and investment in public infrastructure.

Mr. Peter Rees: The main criterion is the long-term benefit to the economy.

Drug Detection Staff

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Customs and Excise officers were employed, in each year since 1979, solely for the purpose of drug detection tasks.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 21 June 1985, c. 232]: The number of Customs and Excise officers employed solely on drugs investigation work was as follows:

	Number
1979	121
1980	133
1981	152
1982	183
1983	201
1984	212

About 30 full-time support staff are currently employed and, as announced on 11 June, a further 50 specialist investigative posts are being added in 1985.

In addition, the government announced last October an additional 160 officers solely for drugs work. A further 2,715 customs officers are employed on preventive work, an important part of which involves the detection of drugs.

Inflation

Mr. Latham asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer to what factors he attributes recent sharp increases in the rate of inflation; why this has exceeded the expectations which he announced in his budget statement; and when he expects to resume progress towards the Government's ultimate objective of price stability.

Mr. Peter Rees [pursuant to his reply, 24 June 1985, c. 324]: The recent rise in retail price inflation is mainly attributable to the rise in mortgage interest rates during 1985 and the fall in sterling in the latter part of last year and the beginning of this year. This fall in the exchange rate, since reversed, appears to have had a somewhat larger impact on domestic prices than was anticipated a few months ago. I remain confident that the rate of inflation will fall during the second half of 1985, as forecast in the Budget.

EC (Finance)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing, in respect of the calendar years 1985 to 1988, his estimates of the net payments by the UK to the EEC, pursuant to the estimates given in the public expenditure White Paper for each of the financial years from 1985 to 1988; and if he will also publish a table showing the net contributions by the UK in each of the calendar years from 1973 to 1984, respectively.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 20 June 1985, c. 222]: The calendar year is not an accounting period for purposes of UK expenditure and annual figures for UK net contributions by calendar year are available only in arrears. The figures for the UK's net contributions for the calendar years 1973 to 1983 and the latest estimate of outturn for 1984, at constant 1984 prices, are as follows:

	*£ million Net Total
1973	391
1974	97
1975	−147
1976	380
1977	738
1978	1,481
1979	1,489
1980	927
1981	466
1982	664
1983	674
1984	689

*Negative sign denotes a net receipt.

The figures given in the reply have been calculated in constant prices by use of the GDP deflator based on GDP in pounds sterling at 1984 average market prices. These figures are published in Economic Trends.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the net contribution which the United Kingdom will make to the European Economic Community in 1986 in the event of the own resources of the Community being increased in accordance with the Fontainebleau agreement.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 20 June 1985, c. 222]: The public expenditure White Paper figures for 1985-86 and 1986-87 for our net contributions to European Community institutions were £750 million and £640 million respectively. These took account of the proposed increase in the VAT ceiling and the Fontainebleau abatement mechanism. As is usual, these estimates will be updated, taking account of all relevant factors, for publication in the Autumn Statement. Estimates of the United Kingdom's contributions are not produced on a forward calendar year basis as these are not an accounting period for the purposes of United Kingdom public expenditure. They are available, however, for past years.

Mr. Marlow asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out an index for (a) the Community overall budget and (b) the Community agricultural budget for 1985 and each of the preceding four calendar years indexed against a 1985 index in each case of 100.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 20 June 1985, c. 222]: The information required comparing successive budgets since 1981 at 1985 prices is as follows:

	Total Community Budget	Community Agricultural Budget
1985	100·0	100·0
1984	100·7	94·9
1983	98·0	88·4
1982	92·1	89·6
1981	85·0	76·7

Note: The agricultural expenditure figures in the above table differ in two respects from those given by the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in his reply of 20 June 1985, at column 214. That information concerned actual outturn expenditure and the index was based on current prices.

EMPLOYMENT

Careers Service

61. Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to reform the careers service.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I have taken a close personal interest in the careers service over the last four years and I have been particularly keen to do what I can to improve its effectiveness and efficiency. For example, I have instituted a new system whereby I follow up careers service inspection reports at meetings with the individual local authorities concerned; and I intend to continue to emphasise that it is important for the service to give sound, practical and realistic help to youngsters. I remain concerned that local education authorities should seek the right sort of person as a careers officer. They should be encouraging, to a greater extent than they are, the recruitment of people who have been for several years in the industrial and commercial world, and whose experience is suited to help youngsters.

Political Fund Ballots

Mr. Golding asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether any queries have been raised with the certification officer in connection with any alleged malpractice in the conduct of political fund ballots held under the Trade Union Act 1984; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I am informed by the certification officer that he has not received any queries about malpractices alleged to have taken place during a political fund ballot held under the provisions of the Trade Union Act 1984. The certification officer has the statutory responsibility for approving rules for political fund ballots but he has no power to examine alleged infringements of those rules. This would be a matter for the courts. I am not aware of any proceedings in this connection.

Mr. Golding asked the Secretary of State for Employment what correspondence has been entered into with the certification officer on the funding of political fund ballot campaigns from general funds of trade unions; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I am informed by the certification officer that he has received two letters inquiring in general terms about the statutory provisions relating to the funding of political fund ballot campaigns, to which he has replied giving advice in so far as he is able to do so having regard to his statutory responsibilities. Political fund ballot campaigns may be paid for from general funds of trade unions with the exception of any items of expenditure which are in furtherance of "political objects", as defined in the Trade Union Act 1913, as amended by the Trade Union Act 1984. These are:

"the expenditure of money:

(a) on any contribution to the funds of, or on the payment of any expenses incurred directly or indirectly by, a political party;

(b) on the provision of any service or property for use by or on behalf of any political party;

(c) in connection with the registration of electors, the candidature of any person, the selection of any candidate or the holding of any ballot by the union in connection with any election to a political office;

(d) on the maintenance of any holder of a political office;

(e) on the holding of any conference or meeting by or on behalf of a political party or of any other meeting the main purpose of which is the transaction of business in connection with a political party;

(f) on the production, publication or distribution of any literature, document, film, sound recording or advertisement the main purpose of which is to pursuade people to vote for a political party or candidate or to persuade them not to vote for a political party or candidate".

Mr. Golding asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has been presented with any complaint backed by evidence of malpractice in the conduct of any political fund ballot held under the Trade Union Act 1984; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have been presented with no such complaint.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will list the level of long-term youth unemployment in EEC member countries at the latest available date from sources which are available to him;

(2) what is the level of long-term youth unemployment in England and Wales at the latest available date.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information for EEC member countries is available from the annual publication of the Statistical Office of the European Community (SOEC), Eurostat-Structure of Registered Unemployment in the Community, and for England and Wales from the Department's monthly Employment Gazette. These are available in the Library. The national figures published by SOEC are not comparable because of differences in definitions and coverage of the statistics.

Labour and Social Affairs Council

Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the European Community Labour and Social Affairs Council held in Luxembourg on 13 June.

Mr. Tom King: I represented the United Kingdom at this Council, which reached agreement on seven proposals. The Council's conclusions on a programme of measures for employment make a number of sensible suggestions, particularly on the need for greater enterprise and more flexibility in the labour market. I welcome the conclusions on the statistical mechanism for the European social fund, which makes a sizeable contribution to employment and training schemes in the United Kingdom, the decision on the comparability of vocational training qualifications, which should help improve labour mobility within the Community and the resolution on guidelines for migration policy on which I reaffirmed our commitment to equality of opportunity.

The Council agreed without discussion conclusions on the directive on the education of migrant workers' children, social security regulations and the recommendation on social protection for voluntary workers overseas, which recommends that cover for social security benefits and health care should not be prejudiced by voluntary service abroad.

The Council agreed in principle the central issues of the draft directive on the protection of workers from noise. I made it clear that I would welcome early agreement to a directive setting out requirements to protect employees' hearing.

The Vredeling, part-time work and parental leave draft directives were not taken any further forward. I maintained our reserve in principle on each and stressed that they were not appropriate areas for Community action at this time. the Council noted progress on the draft directive on equal treatment in occupational social security.

I pressed the Commission to include the effect on small firms of the equal treatment directive in its examination of the burdens of Community legislation on firms.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Mr. Alan Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Employment what evidence is available to his Department on the job creation effects of the enterprise allowance scheme.

Mr. Alan Clark: The latest available evidence from a national survey of participants shows that for every 100 businesses supported under the scheme for a full year, 68 additional jobs are created.

Training

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the numbers (a) entering apprenticeships, (b) in apprenticeships and (c) completing apprenticeships in each of the industries for which industrial training boards have operated in each year since 1964.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 24 June 1985, c. 315-16]: This information is not available. It was not a requirement that industrial training boards kept comprehensive records of the numbers in apprenticeship schemes.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment what was the projected cost of the youth training scheme at current prices in the year of its announcement; and what are the costs for 1984-85 and the projected cost for 1985-86 adjusted to the prices of that year.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 24 June 1985, c. 315-16]: The information requested is set out in the table:

	Estimate	Expenditure Outturn	Expenditure in 1983-84 Prices
	£m.	£m.	£m.
1983-84	465·2	380·5	380·5
1984-85	797·1	765·3	732·3
1985-86	781·1	—	711·9

Notes:—
(1) Expenditure covers grants to YTS sponsors and expenditure on research and development but excludes administration costs.
(2) Expenditure in 1983-84 prices is derived using the GDP deflator.
(3) Expenditure outturn for 1984-85 is provisional.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have benefited from the adult training strategy in 1984-85; what is the estimate for 1985-86 and 1986-87; what will be the average number of direct contact hours they will have with trainers; and how these numbers and averages compare with adult training conducted in the years 1975 to 1984 for which his Department was directly or indirectly responsible.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 24 June 1985, c. 315-16]: About 132,000 people benefited from the adult training strategy in 1984-85. We plan that some 220,000 should benefit in 1985-86 and more than 250,000 in 1986-87. Because of changes in the nature of schemes and training arrangements, comprehensive and consistent information about the numbers benefiting from Government-funded training for adults in the period 1975 to 1985 is not available. The table shows numbers benefiting from 1976-77 onwards from the main scheme to have existed throughout the period, the training opportunities scheme. However, the Government have also funded training throughout the period through the industrial training boards and other industry training organisations; through its direct training services to employers until 1983-84—now skillcentre services to employers—and through a number of new measures under the adult training strategy since 1984-85. I regret that information about average direct contact hours with trainers is not available.

Entrants to Training Opportunities Scheme

† From 1985-86 components of TOPS renamed job training scheme, wider opportunities training programme and training for enterprise. (These totals include all three of these programmes).

ENVIRONMENT

Anti-fouling Paints

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will detail the damage that has been done to oysters and other marine organisms, and where, by tributyl tin from anti-fouling paint;

(2) when he intends to impose a ban on the use of tributyl tin paint;

(3) if he will list all those individuals and organisations that have made representations to him to (a) impose a ban on the use of tributyl tin paint and (b) not impose a ban on tributyl tin paint;

(4) if he has any estimate of the economic cost of the damage to oysters and other marine organisms caused by tributyl tin from anti-fouling paint;

(5) what information he has as to which other countries ban or restrict the use of tributyl tin paint; and what have been the results.

Mr. Waldegrave: Information on the damage to oysters and other marine life is set out in the paper placed in the Library of the House in response to questions from my hon. Friend the Member for Gosport (Mr. Viggers) answered on 24 April 1985 at columns 464-66. The effects on oysters include shell thickening, poor overall growth, reduced yield, and inhibition or total failure of reproduction. Effects on the growth and reproduction of other organisms have also been demonstrated. I have became aware recently of work in the United States of America which indicates that species diversity may also be affected.

Government proposals to control the supply and use of organotin based anti-fouling paints in order to protect the marine environment were issued for consultation in February 1985. Over 800 representations were received during the consultation. These are currently being assessed and I expect to announce the Government's conclusions soon. To list all the individuals and organisations making representations would not be appropriate but I shall provide the hon. Member with an analysis of the results of the consultation when this is available and place copies in the Library of the House at that time.

No estimate of the economic cost of damage to oysters and other marine life has been attempted. It would be difficult, if not impossible, to do. Any value for shellfish which might have been grown and marketed had they not been affected by tributyl tin must be hypothetical. Other affected organisms, which are important to the well-being of the marine environment, have no commercial value in themselves.

The use of anti-fouling paints containing tributyl tin has been restricted in France and the results have included the progressive recovery of some areas previously damaged. I am also aware of research going on in several other countries.

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider extending the scope of the proposed ban on the use of anti-fouling paints based on organotin compounds.

Mr. Waldegrave: There is, as yet, no ban on the use of anti-fouling paints based on organotin compounds. Proposals to prevent the use of these paints on small craft were issued for consultation in February 1985. The evidence which led to these proposals relates to shallow waters and estuaries where there are large numbers of small craft moored for long periods and the proposals are framed to deal specifically with this situation. Any extension of the proposed controls would depend on further evidence of need. I expect to announce soon the results of the consultation and the Government's conclusions.

Swan Deaths

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will conduct an investigation jointly with the Nature Conservancy Council to ascertain the relationship between the increase in river traffic and the incidence of swan deaths, with a view to making recommendations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: There is circumstantial evidence that the problem of lead poisoning of swans by ingestion of fishing weights is particularly acute in waterways which do not have an abundance of aquatic vegetation, often as a consequence of an increase in river traffic. This is thought to be because discarded or accidentally spilt shot remains more easily accessible to swans where vegetation is sparse. However, the problem of lead poisoning is not confined to waterways with heavy river traffic and I am satisfied, from the scientific evidence provided by the Nature Conservancy Council, that the major and direct cause of deaths of swans is the ingestion of fishing weights. I do not consider it necessary to conduct any additional investigation along the lines suggested.

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report a list of those rivers and the counties through which they flow, where a noticeable rise in the number of swan deaths has followed an increase in river traffic; if he will make available any other information his Department has gathered on this subject; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: This information is not available.

Lighting (London)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of urban aid is spent on urban lighting within London.

Sir George Young: The information is not available in the form requested. In 1984–85 urban programme expenditure on schemes involving the provision or replacement of street lighting, street furniture and repair work accounted for 0·3 per cent. (or £142,000) of allocations made to partnership and programme authorities in London. Figures for 1985-86 are not yet available.

Urban Aid

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the types of projects which have been declared eligible for urban aid.

Sir George Young: My Department pays grant in respect of urban programme projects put forward by local authorities under the Local Government (Social Need) Act 1969. In practice, a wide range of schemes has been supported, including projects designed to encourage enterprise and business creation, reclaim derelict sites and refurbish vacant buildings and tackle social problems. The revised ministerial guidelines for the urban programme, issued in May 1985, reaffirm the priority attached to projects that enhance the potential for investment and employment in inner city areas. Projects which tackle inner city problems through a range of economic, environmental and social projects are also eligible. A copy of the guidelines has been placed in the Library of the House.

Housing Defects

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce his decision on whether to designate Boswell homes in Erdington, Birmingham, and elsewhere under the Housing Defects Act; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Gow: My Department is examining this matter in consultation with officials of Birmingham city council from whom further information is awaited. I shall announce a decision as soon as possible.

Urban Development Grant

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment in approving applications for urban development grant, whether relevant local authorities are required to support approved applications financially; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Yes. All applications for urban development grant are submitted by local authorities. Twenty-five per cent. of the public sector contribution to an approved project is paid by the local authority and 75 per cent. by the Department.

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many hotels have received urban development grant in the last five years to refurbish bedrooms to AA four-star standards.

Sir George Young: Two.

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many hotels have had applications for urban development grant approved, to date, in the last five years; if he will give details of amounts of grant approved in total and for each project; and what are the main criteria taken into account when urban development applications are considered.

Sir George Young: Six offers of urban development grant have been made, all within the last five years, for hotels or developments including hotels:

	£ million
	Public sector contribution (UDG)	Private sector investment
Liverpool, Adelphi Hotel	1·37	5·16
Birmingham, Paradise Circus	*4·68	*24·04
Kingston upon Hull, Town Docks	1·32	3·19
Sheffield, George St.	0·06	0·49
St. Helens, Newton Park Farm	0·60	3·15
Bradford, Midland Hotel	0·25	0·95
	8·28	36·98

* Hotel only part of this project.

One other offer for a hotel project has been made but was not taken up.

The criteria for approval of urban development grant are set out in the Department's guidance notes, a copy of which I am sending to the hon. Member.

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applications for urban development grant have been approved in the last year; how many applications have been rejected; and what was the total of grant approved.

Sir George Young: Since 1 April 1984, 77 applications for urban development grant have been approved and 28 applications have been rejected. The total public expenditure envisaged in the approved projects is £33·6 million and the private investment £121·3 million.

Ely Cathedral (Planning Application)

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what were his reasons for issuing a holding order to East Cambridgeshire district council relating to a planning application to build 63 homes on open land next to Ely cathedral; and what further action he proposes in this matter.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: A direction under article 10 of the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1977 was issued in order to enable me to consider whether the application should be called in for my own determination, or left to the local planning authority to decide. I shall let the hon. Member know what I decide.

Land (Public Bodies)

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to exercise his powers under the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 to compel public bodies to dispose of their interests in land entered in the registers of unused and under-used land.

Mr. Macfarlane: The Government are determined that unused and underused publicly-owned land should be brought into full use as soon as possible.

My right hon. Friend has therefore today issued notices under section 99 of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 relating to 50 sites entered on the registers of unused and under-used publicly owned land. The notices advise the landowners concerned that he proposes to direct them to dispose of these sites. The notices give the landowning bodies the opportunity to make representations to the Secretary of State as to why he should not direct them to dispose of their interest in the land or as to the contents of the proposed direction. A list of the 50 sites, which in total amount to 157 hectares of land, has been placed in the Library of the House.

Since the land registers were established about 8,000 hectares of land have been removed because they have been either sold or brought back into full use. We are very concerned that the momentum achieved so far should be maintained and these notices are a demonstration of our commitment.

We will continue to look closely at sites on the register with a view to identifying further candidates for disposal. In addition, as my right hon. Friend has recently made clear, we are keen that companies, developers and other interested parties should draw to our attention any publicly owned land which they believe is underused and should be on the register and any registered land which they believe should be sold.

Yorkshire Water Authority

Sir Michael Shaw asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has received any response from the Yorkshire water authority following the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report last December; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gow: I am grateful to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission for its thorough investigations and report.

The report has been considered by the Yorkshire water authority and I am placing a copy of its initial response in the library of the House. The report commented on the substantial improvement in the efficiency of the authority in recent years particularly since the authority was reconstituted in October 1983. I congratulate Mr. Gordon Jones, who was then appointed chairman, for ths achievement.

Effective action is being taken on the five matters to which the report recommended that priority should be given (paragraph 2.67) work to establish and record the state of underground assets, to develop and use unit cost measures; to review calculations comparingthe costs and benefits of leakage control; to develop a structured approach to assessment of manpower requirements; and to develop a more rational approach to deciding investment priorities. When the authority reports again early next year I shall be looking for evidence, quantified wherever possible, of actual or projected achievement on these and other recommendations.

I have drawn the report to the attention of the other regional water authorities.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Hospital Health Standards (Prosecutions)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will seek to lift the immunity from prosecution for Crown property such as hospitals alleged to have inadequate environmental health standards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that the hon. Member is concerned about hygiene standards in the kitchens of NHS hospitals. In Health Circular HC(77)24 health authorities were told to give environmental health officers "open access" to their catering departments, to comply with the relevant regulations and not to use Crown immunity as a reason for failing to ensure that the standards prescribed by the regulations are met. We shall consider whether further action is required when the report of the inquiry into the outbreak of food poisoning at the Stanley Royd hospital, Wakefield is received.

Community Care

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he now expects to publish his reply to the second report from the Social Services Committee, Session 1984-85, on community care.

Mr. John Patten: We wish to reply as fully and as helpfully as possible, and to take appropriate account of other relevant work now in hand. We hope to publish our reply within the next few weeks.

Kidney Patients

Mr. Penhaligon asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the renal units in England and the number of patients in each case who use the facilities to dialyse on a regular basis.

Mr. John Patten: According to provisional data supplied by the European Dialysis and Transplant Association, the numbers of renal patients receiving dialysis at 31 December 1984 under the care of each NHS dialysis centre in England (grouped by region) was as follows:

	Haemodialysis		Peritoneal dialysis

Pensions (Uprating)

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, in the light of the proposals in the Green Paper on social security, the uprating of the basic retirement pension will continue to be carried out on the historic basis; and upon which months' figures it will be based.

Mr. Newton: The uprating of basic retirement pension will continue to be determined according to the historic method. The month in which the movement in prices will be measured will depend on the precise dates of the upratings in July 1986 and April 1987. Our provisional expectations is that the July 1986 uprating would be based on the retail prices index for January 1986 and the April 1987 uprating on the RPI for September 1986.

Cleft Palates

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has about the percentage of children born in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the London borough of Newham who have cleft palates.

Mr. John Patten: There were 695 notifications of liveborn children with cleft palate (including with cleft lip) in the United Kingdom in 1983, the latest year for which figures are available. This number is 0·098 per cent., of the corresponding number of livebirths.

In 1983 and 1984 there was a total of eight notifications of liveborn children with cleft palate (including with cleft lip) in the London borough of Newham, representing 0·103 per cent., of the number of livebirths.

It should be noted that the systems of notifications of congenital malformations differ in each country of the United Kingdom.

Housing Benefit

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) when he proposes to publish proposals on reform of non-dependent deductions in housing benefit, as announced in paragraph 3.71 of the "Reform of Social Security: Programme for Change" (Cmnd. 9518);

(2) whether he intends to bring forward proposals for minimum payments of housing benefit, following the recommendation contained in paragraph 4.23 of the report of the housing benefit review (Cmnd. 9520).

Mr. Newton: These are matters for further consideration in the light of comments during the consultative period, and on which decisions will be taken as appropriate when the basic structure of any proposals for change have been settled.

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he proposes to implement the proposals to apply an income cut-off on housing benefit contained in paragraphs 3.15-3.17 of the report of the housing benefit review team (Cmnd. 9520).

Mr. Newton: We have not included an income cut-off, as suggested by the review team, in our specific proposals for reform because we recognise that it would be difficult to operate and one of our overall aims is greater simplicity of administration. We will, however, take into account any views expressed on this point during the consultation period. We do propose to introduce a capital cut-off, as indicated in paragraph 3.45 of Volume 2 of the Green Paper*.

*"Reform of Social Security: Programme for Change", Cmnd. 9518.

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what assessment he made of the effect of local limits on the level of overall expenditure prior to making his proposal set out in paragraph 3.67 of Cmnd. 9518 to take reserve powers to set limits to the level of rent eligible for housing benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: None. It is not possible to make any sensible estimate of the effect on overall expenditure of a reserve power.

Water Charges

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance is given to adjudication officers by the Chief Adjudication Officer concerning the direct payment to water authorities, or local authorities on their behalf, of payments towards arrears of water charges; and how many such direct payments of arrears have been made in the years 1979-80 until the year for which the latest figures are available.

Mr. Whitney: Direct payment in respect of arrears of water charges can be made only where a claimant's supplementary benefit includes an amount for water charges as part of his housing requirements. Detailed guidance to adjudication officers on the criteria to be used in the implementation of water charges direct is given in paragraphs 9035-9036 of the "S Manual", a copy of which is in the Library. Direct payments should be arranged when the claimant has arrears in excess of half the annual charge due and it is in the interests of the claimants to do so or otherwise when it is in the overriding interests of the claimants and his family.

Information regarding the number of payments of water charges direct is not available.

Drug Rehabilitation Centres

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much money was spent by central Government and what information he has as to the amount of money spent by (a) metropolitan councils and (b) borough councils on drug dependency and rehabilitation centres for each year since 1978.

Mr. John Patten: The Department has made grants to voluntary organisations under its general scheme of grants and the drugs initiative, and has made funds available to health authorities under the latter scheme, as follows, for services for drug misusers.

1978-79	76,760
1979-80	71,110
1980-81	132,270
1981-82	141,850
1982-83	180,174
1983-84	1,077,854
1984-85	2,138,817

Information on expenditure by metropolitan councils and borough councils on services for drug misusers is not held centrally.

Tranquillisers

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of prescription issued by each district health authority with the North East Thames regional health authority for minor tranquillisers for both claimants and non-claimants for each month since January 1982.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not collect this kind of detailed information centrally. Neither do we have any reason to believe that the North-East Thames regional health authority makes such analysis of prescriptions issued, but the hon. Member may ask it if he wishes.

Family Income Supplement

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing the age distribution of children in families in receipt of family income supplement, based on the age bands used for the supplementary benefits scheme.

Mr. Whitney: The following is the information at the end of October 1984, the latest date for which a breakdown by age is available.

Age Range	No. of Children
0-10	276,000
11-15	126,000
16-17	23,000
18 and over	4,000
Total	429,000

Maternity Grant

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the number and proportion of mothers who have received the maternity grant who are in families in receipt of neither supplementary benefit nor family income supplement during the latest period for which figures are available.

Mr. Newton: I regret that there are no figures which link receipt of maternity grant with receipt of supplementary benefit or family income supplement.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish figures showing the average amount received in additional requirements to supplementary benefit (a) by all those claimants in receipt of such additions and (b) by claimants in receipt of such additions in the following specific categories: (i) retirement pensioners, (ii) the unemployed, (iii) the sick and disabled and (iv) one-parent families.

Mr. Whitney: Provisional information at December 1983 is as follows:

Amount per week

All claimants	3·55
Retirement pensioners	3·61
Unemployed	3·27
Sick and disabled	4·64
One parent families	3·21

Source: Annual Statistical Enquiry 1983.

Pensions (Reciprocal Arrangements)

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the countries with which the United Kingdom has reciprocal arrangements for increasing retirement pensions for nationals living abroad.

Mr. Whitney: These countries are:

Austria
Belgium
Bermuda
Cyprus
Denmark
Federal Republic of Germany
France
Gibraltar
Greece
Guernsey
Irish Republic
Isle of Man
Israel
Italy
Jamaica
Jersey
Luxembourg
Malta
Mauritius
Portugal
Spain
Switzerland
The Netherlands
Turkey
United States of America
Yugoslavia

Increases are also payable to pensioners living in Sark. This is by virtue of a separate provision in the Social Security Benefit (Persons Abroad) Regulations 1975.

One-parent Families

Sir William Clark asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of one-parent families in Great Britain, differentiating between widows and widowers, divorcees and others.

Mr. John Patten: Taking account of results from the 1981 census and information from the general household survey for the years 1981-83 the best available estimates of the numbers of one-parent families in Great Britain are as follows:

	1982 (thousands)
Lone mothers:
single	180
widowed	120

	1982 (thousands)
divorced	350
separated	180
Lone fathers	100

Patient Treatment (Rugby)

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many patients were treated in the Rugby district health authority area in 1984; and how that figure compares with each year since 1979.

Mr. John Patten: Information on individual patients treated is not available centrally. Available information on the main patient services is given in the table.

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether he will reinstate fabrol granules on the limited list in the interest of patients with chronic bronchial problems for whom the products currently on the list have proved to be inadequate;

(2) whether he will reclassify the status of bromhexine with regard to the limited list; which non-inhalational mucolytics are currently available on the limited list; and whether he will add bisolvon elixir or tablets to the limited list.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The advice of the Government's Chief Medical Officer's group of independent medical and pharmaceutical experts was that Fabrol granules, Bisolvon tablets and elixir (bromhexine hydrochloride) and other similar mucolytic agents were of no established therapeutic value and so should be removed from NHS prescription.

There is a difference of opinion within the medical profession on the value of this group of drugs in the treatment of chronic bronchitis. We are making arrangements for the committee which will review the selected list to consider these drugs at its first meeting. We shall announce details of the committee soon.

District Health Authorities

Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will arrange district health authorities in order of listing upon dividing the revenue expenditure, as contained in the 1983-84 annual statutory accounts, of each district health authority in England by the population figures for each district.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Social Security Review

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many households will lose housing benefit completely as a result of the upratings announced in the House on 18 June.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

DEFENCE

Trident Submarines (Communications)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions have been held with the United States Government about using existing or planned Navstar satellites for communication with United States Trident submarines and to control their missiles; and how the problem of independent United Kingdom control has been approached.

Mr. Stanley: There are no plans to use Navstar satellites for the purposes to which the hon. Member refers. I also refer him to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton (Mr. Kaufman) on 21 March at column 578.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence for how long it is expected that communications with Trident submarines and control of their missiles would be dependent on the system now being used to communicate with Polaris submarines; and how far dependence on existing systems would restrict the operating range of the Trident submarines.

Mr. Stanley: The communications systems to be used with Trident for the foreseeable future are essentially those which are currently used with the Polaris submarines. This will not prevent the Trident submarines from making full use of their maximum operating range. We have however retained the option of incorporating additional new communications facilities where design and production dates allow.

Policing

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current establishment of his Department's police; how many are currently in post; and if he will provide a breakdown by rank.

Mr. Lee: The current figures for the Ministry of Defence police are as follows:

	Establishment	Strength
Chief Constable	1	1
Deputy Chief Constable	1	1
Assistant Chief Constable	5	5
Chief Superintendent	7	7
Superintendent	19	19
Chief Inspector	50	51
Inspector	171	154
Sergeant	655	635
Constable	3,500	3,350
	4,409	4,223

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence when private security firms were first employed by his Department; in what numbers; and what was the cost involved.

Mr. Lee: Private security firms were first employed by the Department in 1978. Contracts for guarding duties are currently in force at some 10 locations. The total value of the contracts involved is approximately £1·1 million.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many police were recruited by his Department in each of the last two years.

Mr. Lee: During the last two financial years the following officers were recruited to the Ministry of Defence police:

	Number
1983-84	334
1984-85	396

Between 1 April and 31 May 1985 a further 116 officers have been recruited.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the current review of the role of his Department's police; when the review will be completed; if he will publish a summary of the results; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: My right hon. Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement announced the current review of the role, composition and size of the Ministry of Defence police on 21 December 1984 at column 377.

The review committee uner the chairmanship of Sir Ewen Broadbent has beenmeeting regularly since 4 January 1985 to take evidence from a wide range of interested parties and this process will be completed shortly.

The committee plans to report on its findings in the early autumn and I am sure that my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for defence will consider publication if appropriate.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence why private security firms are being used to guard Eastney barracks in Portsmouth; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The use of a commercial guard force at the Royal Marines barracks, Eastney is in line with Government policy to put work to the private sector wherever this can be done without adverse operational of financial consequences. The guard duties are performed in accordance with the appropriate Government guidelines and there is no adverse affect on security.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the standard of performance of his Department's police in executing their duties.

Mr. Lee: Over the past three years there have been significant changes in the commitments which the Ministry of Defence police has been required to meet, particularly in the need for increased protection at defence establishments. The force has responded to these changes with patience, tact and good humour and its officers continue to perform their often difficult and onerous duties, frequently away from their home stations, in exemplary fashion and to their usual high standards.

Royal Ordnance plc

Mr. Douglas Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will identify all designs in weapons systems rights, now possessed by Royal Ordnance plc and formerly possessed by the Royal Ordnance factories.

Mr. Butler: The rights referred to were transferred to Royal Ordnance plc by a scheme made under section 1 of the Ordnance Factories and Military Services Act 1984.

The details now sought have not been published in full as I consider that disclosure would be contrary to national security or to the commercial interests of Royal Ordnance plc.

NATIONAL FINANCE

EC (Budget Discipline)

84. Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the next European Economic Community Council meeting will further consider the financial guidelines for budget discipline.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Yes. The 1986 reference framework is on the agenda for the July ECOFIN.

Worker Co-operatives

Mr. Bob Edwards asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will bring forward measures to allow worker co-operatives, registered under industrial and provident society legislation, access to profit-sharing tax concession schemes on the same basis as small companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: I refer the hon. Member to the statement I made during the Committee stage debates on clause 43 of the Finance Bill, in Standing Committee B, on 4 June 1985, at columns 350-56.

THE ARTS

Arts Council

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts what negotiating machinery exists between the Arts Council of Great Britain and the trades unions with which it is involved.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 24 June 1985, c. 319]: The Arts Council recognises two unions, the Association of Supervisory, Technical and Management Staff and the Civil Service Union, both of which attend the council's joint negotiating committee.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts if he will state the qualifications of Mr. Ronald Grierson to be a member of the Arts Council of Great Britain.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 24 June 1985, c. 319]: Mr. Grierson is eminently qualified for membership of the Arts Council, by reason of his personal qualities and his experience of the financing of artistic organisations.

WALES

Independent Schools

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many independent schools there are in Wales; and what information he has as to how many children attend them, as to the proportion of the total school population this represents, and as to the comparable figures for each of the last five years.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: The information is as follows and refers to 1 January for each year:

	1980*	1981	1982	1983	1984
Number of independent schools	71	72	71	73	70
Number of full-time and part-time pupils	12,703	12,795	12,348	11,247	11,427
Pupils as a proportion of total school population (%)	2·3	2·3	2·3	2·3	2·2

* Figures include information on 3 direct grant schools, which, from 1980-81 became independent.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many pupils attend independent school sixth forms in Wales; and what proportion of the total number of sixth form pupils in Wales this represents.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: Information on the number of pupils in the sixth forms of independent schools is not collected centrally. The number of pupils at independent schools in January 1984, who were aged 16 and over at the beginning of the school year, total 1,576. This number represented 6·6 per cent. of pupils aged 16 and over at all maintained secondary and independent schools.

ENVIRONMENT

Merseyside County Council

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on Merseyside county council's current financial position and its anticipated overspend of £13 million above its rate-capped ceiling.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: Merseyside county council fixed its budget and precept for 1985-86 on 7 March. It is for it to keep spending within available income.

Bird Conservation

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department has received from the European Commission any documents listing sites in the United Kingdom of importance for bird conservation.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: My Department has received from the EC a substantial volume of documentation containing a wide variety of information on habitats of particular importance to the conservation of birds and other wildlife. This has facilitated the identification of some 151 sites which meet the criteria for listing as special protection areas under the EC birds directive and 129 sites which qualify for designation as wetlands and international importance under the Ramsar convention.

The speed of listing or designation, as the case may be, depends on progress on the SSSI renotification programme. We now expect to be able substantially to complete this programme by the end of 1986, and in the meantime I am discussing with the Nature Conservancy Council possible ways of speeding up progress on listing special protection areas under the EC birds directive and designating sites under the Ramsar convention.

Enterprise Zones

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many jobs were created at each of the enterprise zones in the United Kingdom during 1984.

Sir George Young: My Department has completed a report on ctivity, including employment, last year in enterprise zones in England, Scotland and Wales. Arrangements are being made for the report to be published shortly. Copies of the published document will then be placed in the Library of the House. A separate report on the zones in Northern Ireland will be completed later in the year.

Planning Control

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation prohibiting any building from taking place in cases where planning permission is necessary until full planning permission has been obtained; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macfarlane: Local planning authorities already have adequate powers to deal with breaches of planning control and may require the demolition of buildings erected without permission if they consider such a course appropriate.

Devon County Council (Grant Penalty)

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy, when assessing the possible liability to grant penalty of Devon county council, to disregard any expenditure in excess of its target occasioned by the cost of repairing roads damaged by the severe weather conditions in 1984-85.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend is considering the representations to that effect which he has received from Devon county council.

Local Authority Expenditure

Mr. Watson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what forecast he has made of local authority capital expenditure in England in 1985-86; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: From returns submitted by local authorities, I estimate that net expenditure on services covered by the main cash limit will be in the range £1,850 million-£2,750 million compared with the cash limit of £1,911 million. Expenditure by local authorities on the urban programme and derelict land reclamation is likely to be within the total of £279 million, which is the local authority element of the urban aid cash limit.

I am concerned that there is again the prospect of an overspend against the main cash limit. This underlines the importance of the review which we are conducting with the local authority associations to find an improved system of control.

I announced in the House on 18 December 1984, at column 165, that there would be no corrective action provided that outturn appeared likely to be within 5 per cent. of the cash limit (that is up to approximately £2,000 million). I recognise that authorities had to complete the recent returns at a very early stage and that there is still a considerable degree of uncertainty about the prospects for the year's outturn. I do not wish to cause unnecessary disruption to authorities' capital programmes when the figures are still so uncertain, and I propose no action at present. I shall continue to monitor the situation. If in the event there is an overrun on the cash limit it would be met from the reserve of £5 billion and would not add to the planned total of public expenditure.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL FOR SCOTLAND

Fishing (Offences)

Dr. Godman asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland how many persons have been proceeded against for offences relating to illegal fishing at sea in each of the past five years; of what nationality were these persons; and what was the average penalty imposed.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: The information is contained in the table. Average penalties are not shown, but a range of penalties has been given in each year.

Year	Number of prosecutions	*Number of offenders	Range of penalties†	Nationality
				UK	Danish	Spanish	French	Faeroese	Norwegian
1980	30	32	Admonished to £18,000	29	0	2	1	0	0
1981	51	74	Admonished to £6,000	61	9	1	2	0	1
1982	37	65	Admonished to £5,000	63	2	0	0	0	0
1983	36	50	Admonished to £10,000	38	10	2	0	2	0
1984	37	52	Admonished to £11,500	46	0	5	0	1	0

* This number includes masters and owners.

† Fisheries offences attract a wide range of penalties and the maximum penalties given include the value of gear and catches.

SCOTLAND

Grampian Health Board

Mr. Malone asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many buildings are used by Grampian health board for administrative purposes; and what is the current estimate of their capital value.

Mr. John MacKay: The Grampian health board currently uses 10 buildings exclusively for administrative purposes. Their capital value is a matter for the board in the first instance.

Asbestos (Glasgow)

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what reply he has given to the Whitlawburn tenants' association on the problem of financing the removal of asbestos from houses owned and managed by Glasgow district council.

Mr. Ancram: My right hon. Friend has received two recent letters from the association on this subject. They are currently being considered and a reply will be sent very shortly.

Compulsory Purchase Order (Markinch)

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the progress made in dealing with Kirkcaldy district council's application for a compulsory purchase order made on 7 November 1984 concerning land in Markinch, Fife.

Mr. Ancram: Objections have been made against the order and have not been withdrawn. A public local inquiry is likely to be held in September.

Scottish Women's Aid

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the total amount in grant allocated to Scottish Women's Aid in (a) 1983-84, (b) 1984-85 and (c) in the present financial year.

Mr. John MacKay: Grants made to Scottish Women's Aid for current expenditure, including the expenses of the children's worker and the training liaison officer, amounted to £54,259 in 1983-84 and £58,370 in 1984-85. In 1984-85 additional grants of £3,776 were made for certain minor capital items. The level of grant to be offered for the present financial year will be decided soon.

Health Budget

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of the United Kingdom health budget was spent in Scotland in 1983-84 and in 1984-85.

Mr. John MacKay: Gross expenditure on the health programme in Scotland represented 11 per cent. of total expenditure on health in the United Kingdom in 1983-84 and in 1984-85. The proportion for 1984-85 is derived from provisional figures for outturn expenditure in that year.

Mentally Handicapped People

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made since 1982 in reaching the target figure recommended in the Peters report of 0·6 community places per 1,000 population for mentally handicapped persons.

Mr. John MacKay: Provision as at 31 March 1984 was equivalent to 0·32 places per 1,000 population as against 0·26 at 31 March 1982. The breakdown of places is as follows:

Homes for the Mentally Handicapped Bed Complement

	1982	1984
Local authority homes	707	741
Registered homes	535	676
Other homes known to social work departments	109	248
Total	1,351	1,665

Note:
1. Figures for 1982 are contained in Social Work Services Group Statistical Bulletin "Residential Accommodation for the Elderly and Certain Other Adults, 1982". Copies of the bulletin are available in the Library.
2. Figures for 1984 are provisional pending publication.

Age Concern Scotland

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what level of grant was paid by his Department to the organisation Age Concern Scotland in 1984-85 and in the present financial year.

Mr. John MacKay: Grants made available to this organisation in 1984-85 for the provision of services to the elderly in a variety of fields amounted to £106,587. Similar grants amounting to £125,362 have been made available in 1985-86 so far and applications for two additional projects are still under consideration.

Rates

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he intends to take following his meeting with Edinburgh district council on 17 June regarding the application of the rate limitation policy to Edinburgh.

Mr. Younger: I intend to lay before Parliament in the week commencing 1 July a report seeking approval to a reduction of 5·2p in the rate of Edinburgh district council.

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for Fife and each region of Scotland and Britain the number of youth training scheme places authorised for 1984-85, the numbers available and the proportion of available places of those authorised.

Mr. Allan Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 11 June 1985, c. 423]: Information in the form requested could be produced only at disproportionate cost. In particular, the computerised management information for the youth training scheme does not provide details of the number of available places. The table gives the number of YTS places planned and approved in 1984-85 for each local authority region in Scotland and each Manpower Services Commission administrative region in Britain.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Officers Association

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy concerning consultation with the Prison Officers Association.

Mr. Mellor: The association is consulted, whenever possible and appropriate, either ad hoc or through the Whitley council arrangements.

Domestic Fires

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the proportion of domestic fires caused by faulty or old electric wiring and as to the estimated loss in housing stock, cost to the fire brigade and loss of life caused by such fires.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Information is available on the number of fires in dwellings attended by fire brigades for which a fault in fixed mains electrical wiring is recorded as the source of ignition. In 1983 there were 2,016 such fires in the United Kingdom—3·5 per cent. of all fires in dwellings—which resulted in 14 deaths. Information for 1984 is not yet available. Information is not available centrally on the loss in housing stock from these fires, or on the cost to fire brigades of attending these fires.

Drugs Squads

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the strength of the drugs squad for each police force in England and Wales for each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Figures are readily available only for the two previous years and are given in the table. The responsibilities of drugs squads vary between forces and the figures are therefore not necessarily directly comparable.

Burglaries (Merseyside)

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of burglaries committed on Merseyside over each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Mellor: The information available centrally for Merseyside police force area is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales" (table 2.4 of the volume for 1983, Cmnd. 9349). Corresponding figures for 1984 were published in a Home Office statistical bulletin, issue 6/85, on 12 March 1985.

Street Lighting

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will allocate funds for street lighting within the budget for crime prevention of the Metropolitan police; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No. We understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that regular discussions take place at divisional level with councils about changes in the environment, including improvements to street lighting, designed to reduce the opportunities for crime. We also understand that crime prevention panels and community-police consultative groups have initiated similar discussion with councils in the Metropolitan police district.

Foreign Nationals

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the number of foreign nationals and other foreign representatives, excluding diplomats, currently residing within the United Kingdom; if he will give the comparable figures for each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: It is estimated from the labour force surveys that about 1·6 to 1·7 million foreign and Commonwealth citizens were usually resident in Great Britain in the period 1979-83. Information for later years and for Northern Ireland is not available.

Coal Industry Dispute

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is yet in a position to indicate the financial costs incurred by the Metropolitan police in their role in policing the miners' strike; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The additional costs incurred by the Metropolitan police in providing mutual aid to other police forces in connection with the miners' dispute are estimated at £16·5 million. These costs fall to be met by the aided forces and almost £10 million has been paid to date. Discussions on repayment of the balance are currently taking place with the police authorities concerned.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Radio Stations (Licence Fees)

Mr. Fry asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what estimate he has made of the implications for the civil radio market of proposals to raise the licence fees of radios at outstations owned by water authorities; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what consultations have taken place between the radio regulatory division of his Department and water authorities on proposals to raise the licence fees of radios at outstations owned by water authorities; and if he will make a statement;

(3) by how much he proposes to increase licence fees for radios at outstations owned by water authorities; and what percentage this amount represents;

(4) what plans he has to raise the licence fees of radios at outstations owned by water authorities; and if he will make a statement;

(5) what estimate has been made of the increase in costs to water authorities of the proposals to raise the licence fees of radio stations at outstations owned by water authorities; and if he will make a statement;

(6) what estimate he has made of the likely effect on water authorities of proposals to raise the licence fees of radios at outstations owned by water authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: I have no immediate plans to alter Wireless Telegraphy Act fees, but it is now two years since levels were last amended and my officials will shortly be putting proposals to me for increases in most licence fees. The possibility of fees rising has been discussed in the Department's consultative forum on radio link matters, which includes representatives of the water authorities and manufacturers.

It is the Government's intention that WT licence fees should both cover the direct licensing and, where appropriate, frequency assignment costs and also make a contribution to the costs incurred by my Department on wide spectrum management, including representation at international radio conferences. Certain licence types meet this requirement; others do not. In the case of 'scanning telemetry links at water authority outstations, we are aware that the current very low fee falls far short of covering the costs, bearing in mind the engineering effort involved. This has to be rectified. Indeed, it may be appropriate in due course to bring this licence fee more directly in line with the standard fee charged for a radio fixed link. It must be recognised that for water authorities and for many other users the licence fee is only a small fraction of the cost of radio equipment and of little significance when set against the economic benefit to the users of radio. I shall bear in mind all the points raised by my hon. Friend in considering any proposals for increased licence fees.

EC Councils (Industry and Research)

Mr. Moynihan asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the outcome of the European Community Councils of Industry Ministers on 3 June and of Research Ministers on 4 June.

Mr. Butcher: The Industry Council, at which I represented the UK, was the first to deal predominantly with telecommunications. It provided a valuable opportunity to exchange views on the progress of the Community's telecommunications initiative including standards policy and a draft directive on the mutual acceptance of test data for the type approval of telecommunicationss terminal equipment; intergovernmental video-conferencing; and, in preparation for the Research Council the following day, "RACE" (R and D in advanced communication technologies for Europe). We also discussed television broadcasting by satellite.

We agreed in principle that the Community should petition the United States for legal protection against the copying of semiconductor chip designs originated in the Community. I welcomed a report recommending changes to remove competitive disadvantages experienced by the biotechnology industry as a result of Community agricultural regimes, and it was agreed that these changes should be referred to Agriculture Ministers for urgent consideration.

The Research Council, at which the UK was represented by Sir Robin Nicholson (chief scientific adviser), reached a substantial degree of agreement on draft conclusions covering a package of measures including the terms on which the definition phase of RACE should proceed; procedures for considering wider European participation in large research facilities, including the spallation neutron source at the Rutherford Appleton laboratory; the site for the European synchrotron radiation facility; and the establishment of a tritium handling laboratory at the European Communities' joint research laboratory at Ispra in Italy. Final adoption of the conclusions was, however, deferred pending further consideration by France and the UK of their long-standing reservations on the tritium proposal in the context of the overall package now proposed. The UK has subsequently been able to lift its reserve.

Frames Travel (Takeover)

Mr. Fry asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will refer the takeover bid by Thomas Cook Ltd. for the Frames Travel Agent chain of shops to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: The question of a reference arises only if any such bid involves the acquisition of assets in excess of £30 million or the creation or enhancement of a market share of 25 per cent. or more. If it does, my right hon. Friend will decide whether to make a reference in the light of the advice of the Director General of Fair Trading.

British Telecom

Mr Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his latest figure for the number of shareholders in British Telecom and for the number of shareholders who have sold their shares since the company's flotation.

Mr. Butcher [pursuant to his reply, 24 June 1985, c. 279]: I am told that British Telecom had about 1·69 million shareholders as at 31 May. I understand that the company intends to provide an analysis of shareholders by classification of shareholder and size of holding in its report and accounts for 1984-85, which are due to be published on 18 July.

Silver Plate (Exports)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give the amount of imports to the United Kingdom from EC countries for electro-plated nickel silver for the last five years for which figures are available; and whether there are any restrictions on exports of electro nickel plated silver from the United Kingdom to EC countries.

Mr. Fletcher [pursuant to his reply, 25 June 1985, c. 346]: Electro-plated nickel silver (EPNS) goods are not separately identified in the UK Overseas Trade Statistics. There are no restrictions on exports of EPNS products from the UK to other EC countries.

Limited Companies

Mr. Dickens asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he is satisfied with the structure and safeguards for the public in the formation of limited companies in the United Kingdom where directors and nominated shareholders are resident overseas and subject to a different legal framework; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher [pursuant to his reply, 25 June 1985, c. 346]: I see no reason why shareholders (or those who act on their behalf) and directors of companies registered in Great Britain should necesarily reside here. But if my hon. Friend has any specific reasons for recommending a change in the law consistent with our international obligations I would be interested to learn of them.

EMPLOYMENT

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many youth training scheme places were identified and supported in the Burnley travel-to-work area and the county of Lancashire during the last month for which statistics are available.

Mr. Peter Morrison: In 1984-85 there were 1,341 approved youth training scheme places in the Burnley travel-to-work area and 9,043 in the county of Lancashire. The corresponding number of places planned for 1985-86 is 1,293 and 9,163 respectively.

At the end of May 1985 there were 825 young people in training in the Burnley travel-to-work area and 6,020 in the county of Lancashire.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of companies located in the west midlands region which are presently employing young people within the framework of the youth training scheme.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 19 June 1985, c. 194]: There are currently some 250 mode A (that is employer-based) progammes which have young people taking part as employees under the youth training scheme in the West Midlands region.

Training

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment what was the level of Exchequer support for apprenticeships at current and at constant prices in each of the years from 1964 to 1985.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 24 June 1985, c. 315-16]: Information is not available for the financial years 1964-65 to 1974-75. Between 1975-76 and 1982-83, support was provided in the form of premium grants for first-year apprentices and grants for award holders, as well as support for redundant apprentices and unplaced award holders, as follows:

Year	At cash price £ million	*At constant price (1983-84 base) £ million
1975-76	18·9	43·9
1976-77	36·0	77·2
1977-78	38·9	73·3
1978-79	37·8	64·5
1979-80	24·0	35·0
1980-81	33·2	40·8
1981-82	36·0	40·2
1982-83†	38·7	40·5

Since September 1983 substantial support for long duration training including apprenticeships has been provided through the youth training scheme. It is not possible to identify the direct level of Exchequer support on a comparable basis with the table given above.

Notes: * Prices adjusted by the GDP Deflator.

† For financial years 1983-84 and 1984-85, expenditure covering residual payments for apprentice training under these schemes which commenced prior to September 1983, and continued support for redundant apprentices, was as follows:

Year	At Cash Price	At Constant Price (1983-84 base)
	£ million	£ million
1983-4	20·3	20·3
1984-5	3·2	3·1

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Telephone System (Cost)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Lord Privy Seal what is the estimated cost of providing and installing the new telephone system within the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. Biffen: The total cost, including the provision of new handset equipment, is estimated at £2·037 million, of which 81 per cent. (£1·65 million) is to be borne by the House of Commons.

Health and Safety Committee

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will seek to facilitate the setting up of a health and safety committee in the Palace of Westminster to include representation of the trade unions with membership employed in the Palace; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Biffen: A safety committee comprising representatives of management and staff of the House of Commons was first set up in 1976 and continues to meet regularly under the chairmanship of the Deputy Assistant Serjeant at Arms.

Visual Display Units

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Lord Privy Seal if any research is being undertaken into the effects on people employed in the Palace of Westminster who work with visual display units for more than three hours a day; if there are any plans to introduce guidelines for using them safely; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Biffen: In this, as in other matters, the House of Commons seeks to maintain standards broadly in line with the Civil Service, and it follows the relevant guidelines from the Cabinet Office (MPO), Her Majesty's Treasury Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency and the Civil Service Medical Advisory Service in the light of their research into the effects of working with VDUs. The guidance issued jointly by the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency and the Council of Civil Service Unions entitled "The Human Factors associated with the use of Cathode Ray Visual Display Units" was distributed to all Heads of Departments in November 1983. Everything possible is done to ensure that VDUs are sited correctly and that ergonomic factors are fully taken into account, including where relevant the provision of special furniture and screen filters. There is also a system of voluntary eye tests provided by the Nursing Sister for those employed or to be employed on VDUs.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Herons (River Avon)

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has now received a report on the cause of the deaths of 14 herons on the River Avon near Evesham; and whether he is taking any action in relation to the incident.

Mrs. Fenner: Recent reports of the death of 14 herons along the River Avon near Evesham, are at present being investigated by MAFF in consultation with ITENCC, RSPB and the Severn Trent water authority. It is not yet possible to draw any firm conclusions about the likely causes of death until MAFF laboratory studies and the present Severn Trent water authority water sampling programme have been completed.

Exports

Mr. Maclean asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has as to the figures in actual value and percentage terms of agricultural product exports from each of the EC countries over the last five years.

Mrs. Fenner: Information on the value of agricultural exports is summarised in successive editions of the Commission's annual publication "The Agricultural Situation in the Community", copies of which are in the Library of the House. The following table provides the information requested for the years 1979 to 1983; comparable information for 1984 is not yet readily available.

*Total Agricultural Exports

Butter

Mr. Maclean asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will reconsider his decision over delayed payments for butter taken into intervention.

Mr. MacGregor: Although milk production has fallen since the introduction of quotas, United Kingdom public intervention stocks of butter now amount to 170,000 tonnes as compared with 143,000 tonnes a year ago. I would not want to take steps which could add to these and reduce the incentive to find real market outlets. Producers have this year received a 1·5 per cent. rise in the target price for milk and a cut of a percentage point in the co-responsibility levy.

Aujeszky's Disease

Mr. Maclean asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will reconsider his decision over the level of Government funding for eradication of Aujeszky's disease.

Mrs. Fenner: We described very fully to producers' representatives our views on Government funding for the Aujeszky's disease control and eradication scheme as recently as 17 June. There are no grounds for changing our decision.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence he has for his statement in response to the Agriculture Committee's third report on Aujeszky's disease to the effect that the benefits of the eradication policy are already being felt in terms of improved health in the national pig herd, and that there are likely to be increased export opportunities.

Mrs. Fenner: There is an absence of costly clinical manifestations of disease and a marked reduction in the number of infected herds being found. The diminution in incidence of disease is reflected in a reduction in its cost to the industry through fattening delays and other factors. With increased control of the disease, it is reasonable to expect facilitation of exports.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what is his Department's latest estimates, with confidence limits, of the present number of pig units containing one or more Aujeszky's sero-positive pigs in Great Britain, by herd type, size and region; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he expects the eradication of Aujeszky's disease to be complete in Great Britain; and what is his latest estimate of the prospective costs to the industry and the Treasury.

Mrs. Fenner: As we have made clear on a number of occasions, it is not possible to forecast when any control and eradication scheme will attain complete freedom from disease. Aujeszky's disease is among the more difficult upon which such a forecast can be made. We are vigorously pursuing through sow serum surveys and by other means the detection of remaining infection.

Costs to the industry so far, made up of compensation for slaughter and related costs, compensation for disruption, and interest charges, less the salvage value of slaughtered animals, are about £22·8 million. Over £8·5 million has been collected through the levy and the remainder represents the PDEF overdraft. In addition, the Government have spent about £3·2 million in staff and laboratory costs which has not been charged to the industry. Additional costs under the scheme will depend on the extent of remaining infection not yet found.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any proposals to consult the representatives of the pig industry on any future procedural or financial changes in the Aujeszky's disease eradication scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: I had a full discussion with representatives of the Pig Disease Eradication Fund Ltd. about the Aujeszky's disease programme on 17 June in the light of the Agriculture Committee's report and my reply to it. We should, of course, consult the industry if any proposals to amend the scheme were being considered.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Union

5. Mr. Lambie asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his recent proposals to European Economic Community Foreign Ministers concerning practical steps towards European union.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Our ideas, based on those contained in "Europe—the Future"—copies of which are in the Library—include a timetable for completing the Common Market, measures to strengthen political co-operation, and practical steps to improve decision taking.

44. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the proposals on European union will be discussed by the Council of Foreign Ministers at their next meeting; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 25 June.

81. Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the suggestions made by Her Majesty's Government in respect of the Heads of Government working party (Dooge committee) on European union.

Mr. Rifkind: Where they differ from the views of others, United Kingdom suggestions are contained in footnotes to the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on Institutions, which has been published.

83. Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Parliament will be asked to approve the Dooge committee proposals before final decisions on them are taken in the EC.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the right hon. Member for Strangford (Mr. Taylor) on 9 May 1985 at column 506.

Council of Foreign Ministers

7. Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what matters he will ask to be placed on the agenda of the next meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers.

Mr. Rifkind: The next meeting of the Foreign Affairs Council will be held on 22 and 23 July. It is too early to say what items will be on the agenda, although follow-up to this week's European Council will be among them.

Space and Anti-ballistic Missiles (Soviet Research)

12. Mr. Maclean asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether his Department plans to take any steps to publicise the extent of Soviet research into space and new anti-ballistic missile weapons.

59. Mr. Forman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will publish a report on the extent of Soviet research into space and anti-ballistic missiles.

Mr. Luce: The Soviet Defence Minister has recently admitted that the Soviet Union is conducting outer space research, including in the military sphere. Soviet activities in this field are extensive and long established, as I told my hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, North (Mr. Thompson) on 24 April, at columns 448-49. I am considering whether further information can be made available in the near future.

Mr. Raoul Wallenberg

14. Mr. Sumberg asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise the case of Mr. Raoul Wallenberg at the human rights convention in Ottawa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: Our delegation to the Ottawa meeting of human rights raised the case of Raoul Wallenberg during bilateral discussions with its Soviet counterpart. The response from the Soviet side was to reiterate their claim that Mr. Wallenberg had died in 1947.

Italy

18. Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to meet the Foreign Minister of Italy; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I expect to meet my Italian colleague, Signor Andreotti, in Milan at the European Council on 28-29 June.

Sri Lanka

19. Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with members of the Commonwealth on the situation in Sri Lanka.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: It is the convention, of course, that the Commonwealth does not discuss the internal problems of member states without the consent of the country concerned. We have none the less kept in close touch with the Government of Sri Lanka both before and after the visit there of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in April. We particularly welcome the recent discussions between the Governments of Sri Lanka and of India, with whom we have also maintained contact, and the announcement of a cease-fire in Sri Lanka on 18 June.

28. Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to seek to visit Sri Lanka.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have at present no plans to do so.

69. Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many applications for emigration to the United Kingdom have been received by the consulate in Sri Lanka over the last 12 months; and what proportion of these were in respect of Tamils.

Mr. Renton: Between May 1984 and May 1985 the high commission in Colombo received a total of 201 entry clearance applications for settlement in the United Kingdom. It is not possible to provide a breakdown of those from Tamils as, until 30 May 1985, applications were recorded on a basis of nationality only.

Chemical Weapons Talks (Geneva)

20. Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the United States Government about the chemical weapons talks in Geneva.

Mr. Luce: My right hon. and learned Friend is in regular contact with the United States Administration about the chemical weapons negotiations in Geneva, as over other aspects of arms control. When he saw Secretary Shultz in Lisbon during the recent meeting of the North Atlantic Council, they agreed on the need to press for the early conclusion of a comprehensive chemical weapons ban.

European Council of Ministers (Majority Voting)

21. Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those areas in which the Government are prepared to accept the greater use of majority voting in the Council of Ministers.

Mr. Rifkind: Over 40 articles of the treaty of Rome already provide for majority voting, but the Council's practice has usually been to defer votes in the search for unanimity. We consider that British interest would be well served if votes were more regularly taken where the treaty so provides, subject to the right of member states to insist that discussion is continued where very important national interests are at stake.

BBC External Services

23. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he is planning any changes in the way the British Broadcasting Corporation external services are financed.

Mr. Renton: We are actively considering the recommendations in the Perry report for changing the way the BBC external services are financed. These include the recommendation that the grants-in-aid to the external services should be determined on a multi-annual basis.

Gulf Oil Installations (Angola)

24. Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will raise at the United Nations Security Council the attempted sabotage of Gulf Oil installations in Cabinda, Angola, by South African military forces.

Mr. Rifkind: A Security Council meeting on the subject was held on 20 June at the request of the Government of Angola. The Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 567, strongly condemning the South African action.

Hong Kong

25. Mr. Neale asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the future of Hong Kong in the light of the recent visit by the Chinese Prime Minister.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The future of Hong Kong was among the subjects discussed by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister with the Chinese Premier. I also discussed this subject with Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian. Both sides reaffirmed their determination to implement fully the joint declaration on the question of Hong Kong, which was ratified on 27 May and was subsequently registered at the United Nations by both Governments on 12 June.

South Africa

26. Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations the United Kingdom ambassador to South Africa has made to the South African Government on human rights in that country.

Mr. Rifkind: Directly and with our partners in the Ten, we have made such representations on a number of occasions recently through our ambassador in Pretoria, through the South African ambassador here, and through the Italians on behalf of the Ten.

40. Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to review the operation in the United Kingdom of the United Nations arms embargo against South Africa.

52. Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to review the operation in the United Kingdom of the arms embargo against South Africa.

Mr. Rifkind: We see no reason at present to conduct any such review, but would consider evidence which suggested the need for one.

Chile

27. Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on current United Kingdom relations with Chile.

46. Dame Judith Hart asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current state of relations between the United Kingdom and Chile.

Mr. Renton: We have normal diplomatic relations with Chile, but continue to make clear out concern about human rights violations and the constraints on political activity. We hope that the lifting of the state of siege with effect from 17 June may mark a new beginning in the process of restoring democratic freedoms.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, in the light of recent killings in Chile, he will reassess United Kingdom relations with that country.

Mr. Renton: We keep the situation in Chile under constant review, and continue to remind the Chilean Government of the need for an improvement in the human rights situation.

Mr. Ahmed Waled Rajab

Mr. Torney asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the reasons for the delay in taking action against the Syrian diplomat, Ahmed Waled Rajab.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 12 June, at columns 496-98, to my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Latham). Before taking any action against diplomats alleged to have used their immunity to default on a civil obligation we need to be satisfied that there has been such an abuse; that legal remedies have been exhausted; and that the diplomat has had time to state his side of the case and to rectify the default.

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office became directly involved in this case in February 1985 when we were told by Mr. Chaffey's solicitors that Mr. Rajab was not ready to observe a court order to vacate Mr. Chaffey's flat. Mr. Rajab eventually vacated the flat before expiry of the deadline for doing so given him by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. In the circumstances, however, we consider that the early transfer of Mr. Rajab from this country would be in the best interests of relations between the United Kingdom and Syria. We have made this clear to the Syrian authorities, from whom we expect an early response.

El Salvador

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to meet a representative of the Government of El Salvador.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans at present to meet a representative of the Government of El Salvador.

78. Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to seek to visit El Salvador.

Mr. Renton: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave the hon. Member on 22 May at column 463.

Falkland Islands

31. Mr. Stan Thorne asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the date of the most recent communication he has had with the Government of Argentina concerning the future of the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Renton: Whilst we are not prepared to discuss the sovereignty of the Falkland Islands, we have since the Falklands conflict take a number of initiatives to achieve more normal bilateral relations with Argentina. For example, we have made plain to the Argentines our readiness to accept a suitably prepared visit by next-of-kin of Argentine service men buried there.

63. Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy, failing the early establishment of a multilaterally-based conservation and management regime for fisheries in the waters around the Falkland islands, to declare a 200-mile fisheries zone.

Mr. Renton: Our current policy is to work actively for the establishment of a multilaterally-based fisheries conservation and management regime around the Falkland Islands.

67. Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has made any assessment of the practicability of resettlement with compensation for the Falkland islanders.

Mr. Renton: The Falkland islanders have consistently made clear, through their elected representatives, their desire to remain resident in the islands. Many of their families have been in the Falklands for over five generations. We shall continue to protect their right to live there in peace and security under a Government of their own choosing.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will estimate the number and type of fishing vessels to be found at any one time within a 200-mile radius around the Falkland Islands; and what information he has as to what they are fishing for.

Mr. Renton: We currently estimate that since the beginning of 1985 a daily average of about 60 fishing and ancillary vessels have been seen within the Falkland Islands protection zone. They have comprised trawlers, squid jiggers and support vessels. Our information suggests that the main catch is currently squid.

Mexico

32. Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his recent discussions with the President of Mexico.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The President of Mexico paid a most successful state visit to Britain from 11-14 June, during which my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister had talks with him at 10 Downing street, and I had a separate meeting with the Foreign Minister. In these meetings we were able to discuss a wide range of economic and international matters of interest to both Governments. The President's visit marked a further strengthening of our excellent relations with this important Latin American country.

European Community Budgetary Procedure

33. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his European Economic Community counterparts concerning reform of the budgetary procedure.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: In a whole series of talks with my European Community colleagues, I have underlined the need to sustain the momentum of reform which began with the adoption last December of conclusions on budget discipline.

Nicaragua

34. Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current state of British relations with Nicaragua.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Battersea (Mr. Dubs).

Central America

35. Mr. Terry Lewis asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his American counterpart concerning United States policy toward Central America.

Mr. Renton: I have nothing to add to the answer given by my right hon. and learned Friend to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Hillsborough (Mr. Flannery) on 22 May at column 454.

55. Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions have been held by European Economic Community Foreign Ministers concerning political co-operation with Central America.

Mr. Renton: Following the meeting of European Community Foreign Ministers in Luxembourg on 29 April, it was announced that the Ten were following with satisfaction the progress of a mission sent to Central America in April and May. Ministers also confirmed their firm support for the Contadora process.

73. Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to complete discussions with his European Economic Community counterparts on a new political and economic package for Central America.

Mr. Rifkind: We expect the Council of Ministers to be in a position to approve the Commission's negotiating mandate for a European Community/Central America co-operation agreement in time for negotiations with the Central American countries to begin this autumn.

Argentina (British Citizens)

36. Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he is satisfied with the arrangements he has made to seek to ensure the safety of British citizens resident in Argentina.

Mr. Renton: Since the break in diplomatic relations between Britain and Argentina in 1982, the Swiss Government have acted as protecting power with responsibility for British interests and British residents in Argentina. The British interests section of the embassy of Switzerland offers consular services. These arrangements are the most satisfactory ones possible in the unusual circumstances.

Lebanon

37. Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on current events in the Lebanon, in so far as they relate to the policies of Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Luce: We deplore recent appalling acts of violence and lawlessness in Lebanon. We continue to believe that an improvement in security can only be achieved by agreement between the Lebanese themselves. Our primary concern is for the suffering of the civilian population. This month we donated a further £500,000 to the International Committee of the Red Cross Lebanon appeal.

Arms Control Talks (Vienna)

38. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether there has been any recent progress in the mutual and balanced force reduction talks in Vienna.

Mr. Luce: There is no significant progress to report from the mutual and balanced force reductions talks in Vienna. As I told the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) on 24 April, at columns 863-64, we are, together with our NATO allies, continuing to study carefully the Eastern proposal of 14 February. This followed the negative response of the East to the positive Western initiative of April 1984.

39. Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the status of the arms control talks in Geneva.

72. Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether there has been any recent progress in the latest session of the Geneva disarmament talks.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he is satisfied with the progress of the Geneva arms talks.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he is satisfied with the progress of the Geneva peace talks.

Mr. Luce: The talks are still at an early stage. As my right hon. and learned Friend has made clear, they are likely to be long and complex and will require patience and steady nerves. At the recent North Atlantic Council meeting in Lisbon, the allies expressed strong support for United States efforts at the talks and called on the Soviet Union to adopt a positive approach.

Cyprus

41. Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on United Kingdom relations with Cyprus.

Mr. Renton: Relations between the United Kingdom and Cyprus remain excellent. We value them highly.

58. Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made on the Cyprus problem; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The United Nations Secretary General is continuing his efforts to make progress towards a settlement in Cyprus. He has our full and active support.

Middle East

42. Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the latest developments regarding the peace process in the middle east.

53. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on recent diplomatic moves in the Arab/Israeli dispute following the recent visit by King Hussein of Jordan.

57. Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on current progress towards peace in the middle east.

79. Mr. Anderson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what initiatives he is planning to support the efforts of King Hussein to secure a comprehensive settlement in the middle east.

Mr. Brandon-Bravo asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Arab/Israeli peace moves following the recent visit by the Israeli deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. Luce: As I told my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Thurnham) on 19 June, at column 150, we remain convinced that a just and lasting settlement of the Arab/Israel dispute, arrived at by peaceful negotiation, is overwhelminghly in the interests of all the parties, and of the international community as a whole. We therefore fully support King Hussein's current initiative, and also welcome the ideas put forward by the Israeli Prime Minister on 10 June. We maintain a close dialogue with the parties, with whom the prime responsibility for action must lie. As part of this process we recently welcomed in London King Hussein of Jordan and Deputy Prime Minister Shamir of Israel. We are also keeping in close touch with our partners in the European Community, and with the United States, on this important subject.

62. Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to seek to visit the middle east; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: My right hon. and learned Friend has at present no plans to do so.

80. Mr. Walters asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken by Her Majesty's Government to support King Hussein's middle east peace initiative.

Mr. Luce: We maintain a close dialogue with the parties to the Arab-Israel dispute with whom the prime responsibility for action must lie. We recently held talks with King Hussein underlinging our support for the Jordanian-Palestinian initiative of 11 February. We also discussed the dispute with the Israeli Deputy Premier Mr. Shamir during his recent visit. We remain in close touch with our partners in the European Community, and with the United States, who share our belief in the urgent need for a just and lasting settlement arrived at by peaceful negotiations.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) whether Her Majesty's Government will seek clarification from King Hussein of Jordan, in the context of his peace initiative in the middle east, about the intentions of Al Fatah, as stated by Salah Khalaf on 7 June on Radio Monte Carlo about an independent Palestinian state;

(2) what reports he has received from Her Majesty's ambassadors in Amman or Cairo about the broadcast on 5 June on Radio Monte Carlo by the head of the political department of the Palestine Liberation Organisation, Mr. Faruq Qaddumi, refusing any recognition of the state of Israel; and whether Her Majesty's ambassador in Amman will convey to King Hussein the concern of the United Kingdom at this statement.

Mr. Luce: As the discussions following the 11 February agreement are carried forward by King Hussein, there will no doubt continue to be statements by certain of the parties concerned, on both sides, unacceptable to others.

Strategic Defence Initiative

43. Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent consultations he has had with the United Kingdom's European allies concerning the United States' strategic defence initiative.

Mr. Luce: We continue to consult closely with all our allies about the strategic defence initiative. At the recent North Atlantic Council meeting in Lisbon, there was a broad recognition that United States research is necessary in order to match substantial Soviet activity in this area.

Namibia

45. Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the South African Government following its decision unilaterally to establish a transitional Government in Namibia.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden).

47. Mr. McKelvey asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will review his policy of giving full support to the United States of America on the question of Namibia.

76. Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will review his policy on Namibia of giving full support to the United States of America.

Mr. Rifkind: The United States is committed to the implementation of Security Council resolution 435, and we support its efforts to achieve this. United States influence is helpful in efforts to bring Namibia to internationally recognised independence.

51. Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to meet representatives of the transitional Government being established in Namibia on 17 June.

Mr. Rifkind: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to do so.

EC (Foreign Policy)

49. Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he willl list those foreign policy areas in which the European Economic Community has adopted a common stand since 1983.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Ministers of the Ten meeting in political co-operation have issued statements on the following topics since the end of 1983.

1. East/West relations (arms control and Soviet/Western dialogue).
2. The Arab Israel conflict and the situation in Lebanon.
3. The Iran Iraq conflict.
4. Central America and the Contadora process.
5. Terrorism and the abuse of diplomatic immunity.
6. South Africa (on the policy of apartheid).
7. Progress at the conference on disarmament in Europe.
8. The conference on security and co-operation in Europe and implementation of the Helsinki final act.
9. The political situation in Chile.
10. The political situation in Poland.
11. The situation in Afghanistan.
12. The political situation in Cyprus.
13. Mozambique and the Nkomati accord.
14. Military disengagement in southern Angola.
15. The situation in Namibia.
16. The political and economic situation in the Sudan.
17. Human rights abuses.
18. The agreement on the future of Hong Kong.
19. The "London Guidelines" for trade in nuclear materials, equipment and technology.
20. Controls on the export of chemical weapons.
21. The implementation of reform in UNESCO.

Copies of the statements were placed in the Library of the House when they were issued.

Former Public Employees (Rhodesia)

50. Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent steps he has taken to offer assistance to those former Rhodesian public employees, now living in Britain, to seek to secure the release by the Zimbabwe Government of modest amounts of capital in cases of hardship or ill-health.

Mr. Rifkind: We take every opportunity to impress upon the Zimbabwean authorities the hardship which their exchange controls can cause. During my right hon. and learned Friend's visit to Zimbabwe in January, he raised the matter with the Zimbabwean authorities and asked that sympathetic consideration continue to be given to genuine hardship cases. We have throughout taken up individual hardship cases with the Zimbabwean authorities through our high commission in Harare, and we have been able to secure concessionary treatment for a number of these.

Soviet Foreign Minister

54. Mr. Dicks asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether a date has yet been fixed for the planned visit to London of the Soviet Foreign Minister.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: No. Dates are under discussion between the two Governments.

Contadora Process

56. Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent action he has taken to assist the Contadora process in Central America.

Mr. Renton: We gave practical expression to our support for the Contadora process by playing a full part in the meeting of European and regional Foreign Ministers which my right hon. and learned Friend attended at San José in September 1984. We are working closely with our European partners to strengthen political and economic co-operation with the Central American states.

EC Budget

60. Mr. James Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with European Economic Community Foreign Ministers concerning the 1985 budget.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The Foreign Affairs Council last discussed the 1985 budget on 21 March.

Diplomatic Immunity

61. Mr. Douglas asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement with regard to Government policies on diplomatic immunity.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: We are implementing the policy that was fully set out in the Government's report on diplomatic immunities and privileges (Cmnd. 9497).

Anglo-Chinese Relations

64. Mr. Needham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Anglo-Chinese relations in the light of the recent visit by the Chinese Prime Minister.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Relations between the United Kingdom and China are excellent. Premier Zhao Ziyang paid an outstandingly successful official visit from 2 to 8 JUne. His discussions with my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and other members of Her Majesty's Government underlined the potential for further co-operation between Britain and China particularly in economic relations and trade. Both sides will also work to ensure the effective implementation of the Hong Kong joint declaration. Her Majesty the Queen has accepted an invitation to visit China at a time to be agreed.

NATO-WEU (Co-operation)

65. Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the other Foreign Ministers of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation to discuss co-operation with the Western European Union.

Mr. Luce: My right hon. and learned Friend has never met the other Foreign Ministers of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation to discuss co-operation within the Western European Union.

EC Staffing

68. Dr. Michael Clark asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the total number of staff employed by the European Economic Community and the total numbers of staff drawn from each of the member states.

Mr. Rifkind: The permanent staff (all grades) employed by the Commission (excluding staff in the joint research centre) numbered 9,597, broken down as follows:

	Number of staff
UK	883
Germany	1,297
France	1,258
Italy	1,602
Belgium	2,605
Netherlands	514
Luxembourg	457
Denmark	351
Ireland	206
Greece	371
Others	49

Figures for the other institutions are not immediately available. I will write to the hon. Member and also deposit the figures in the Library of the House as soon as they are to hand.

Council of Ministers

70. Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his West German counterpart concerning his use of the veto in the Council of Ministers.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have discussed with my Community colleagues, including my West German counterpart, a proposal that a member state which asks for discussion to continue until unanimous agreement is reached should be required to explain fully and formally, in a special procedure of the Foreign Affairs Council, why it considers very important interests in fact to be at stake. I have had no separate discussions with my West German colleague of the recent use of the veto in the Council of Ministers by his agricultural colleague.

EC (Decision-making)

71. Sir Anthony Meyer asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has made to the European Economic Community Council of Ministers for improved decision-making procedures within the European Economic Community.

Mr. Rifkind: We have proposed that in the enlarged Community more use should be made of the majority voting provisions of the treaties; that where unanimity is required, member states should make greater use of the possibility of abstention provided for in article 148(3) of the treaty of Rome, particularly where Heads of Government have agreed in the European Council that a specific objective should be achieved; and that in order to discourage abuse of the Luxembourg compromise, a member state which asks for discussion to continue until unanimous agreement is reached should be required to explain fully and formally, through a special procedure of the Foreign Affairs Council, why it considers very important interests in fact to be at stake.

Non-Proliferation Treaty

74. Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received on the current year's review of the non-proliferation treaty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has received representations from a number of organisations as explained in my reply to the hon. Member for Meironnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Thomas) on 20 May, at column 336. We have also received letters from members of the public. Some correspondents have expressed views on article VI with which we differ, as I mentioned in my speech about the non-proliferation treaty (NPT) during the adjournment debate on 6 June, at columns 545-58. However, they all agree that the NPT is an important agreement which should be preserved and strengthened, a view which the Government entirely share.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the work of the preparatory committee for the third review conference of the non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Luce: The preparatory committee held three sessions and completed the procedural work necessary for the review conference to be held. There was no major debate of substantive issues, although aspects of the treaty were touched upon during consideration of background documents prepared for the review conference. The British delegation took an active part in the committee.

International Debt

75. Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the debt crisis and the effect of the accession of Spain and Portugal to the European Economic Community on the position of debtor countries.

Mr. Rifkind: As I stated to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central (Mr. Fisher) on 22 May, at column 462, a number of countries have made good progress in tackling their individual debt difficulties. We will continue to co-operate with other Governments, including our present and future European Community partners, international institutions and banks to build on this progress in a flexible and effective manner.

EUREKA Project

77. Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with European Economic Community Foreign Ministers concerning the EUREKA project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. and learned Friend has discussed the EUREKA proposal with other European Community Foreign Ministers in the margins of the Western European Union meeting on 22 and 23 April, the Bonn economic summit on 2 and 3 May, the Foreign Affairs Councils, on 20 and 21 May and 18 and 19 June, at the informal meeting of Community Foreign Ministers on 8 and 9 June. He has also discussed EUREKA during the course of several bilateral meetings with European Ministers.

Drug Smuggling

82. Sir Philip Goodhart asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is taking to prevent the smuggling of drugs through those territories in the Caribbean for which the United Kingdom has responsibility; and what further action he plans to take in the next 12 months.

Mr. Renton: We support the anti-drugs measures being taken by Governments of Dependent Territories. In pursuit of this we have provided expatriate personnel and substantial funds for purchasing equipment and improving security. Close co-operation has also been maintained with United States law enforcement agencies, the United Nations and other competent international authorities. This policy will be actively pursued in the year ahead.

Namibia (Members' Visit)

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what facilities were provided by Her Majesty's Government for the five hon. Members recently in Namibia; what were the total costs to public funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: The five Members of Parliament visited Namibia at the invitation of the Namibia information service which we understand paid for their visit. On their return journey they were received and entertained to lunch by a member of the British embassy in Pretoria in accordance with the embassy's normal practice of keeping in touch with visiting British MPs.

Israel (Military Equipment)

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will now cancel the announcement made on 30 June 1982 that approval of licences for the export of British military equipment to Israel would be withheld until further notice; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: We have made it clear that we shall review these restrictions when all members of the Israeli forces have been withdrawn from Lebanon.

Indonesia

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he is satisfied with current relations between Her Majesty's Government and Indonesia.

Mr. Luce: Yes. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on the 24 April to my hon. Friend the Member for Corby (Mr. Powell). We will continue to foster close and friendly relations with the Indonesian Government.

Guatemala

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had concerning the renewal of consular relations with Guatemala.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. and learned Friend discussed this possibility with the Guatemalan Minister for Foreign Affairs when he was in San Jose in September 1984 for the meeting between European and Central and Latin American Foreign Ministers. There has subsequently been some discussion of this question between officials but no decisions have been made.

European Commission

Mr. Knowles asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a further statement on the prospects of avoiding an overall increase in the European Commission's size following enlargement of the Community.

Mr. Rifkind: Latest indications are that the size of the Commission will increase but the growth in numbers will be significantly less than would have occurred had a pro rata quota for Spain and Portugal been added to the existing establishment. The Commission will require some new posts, especially interpreters and translators. In other areas new posts are not required and some Commission officials will be offered early retirement to make room for Spanish and Portuguese recruits especially at more senior levels.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Office Furniture Manufacturers (Grants)

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many firms producing office furniture have been grant-aided by local enterprise development units; what are the names of these firms; and where they are located.

Dr. Boyson: Two: John Sheridan and Sons of Enniskillen in 1979 and R. H. Knox and Co., Belfast, in 1981, since when there have been no further applications from such firms.

Housing Executive Stock (Windows)

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many houses owned by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in Belfast are fitted with (a) metal window frames, (b) PVC window frames and (c) wooden window frames.

Mr. Chris Patten: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 15 May at column 147.

Local Enterprise Development Unit Offices

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many new jobs have been created by the Local Enterprise Development Unit in each of the last five years.

Dr. Boyson: The information is as follows:

Financial year	New jobs promoted
1980-81	1,055
1981-82	1,613
1982-83	2,550
1983-84	3,658
1984-85	4,009

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many staff will be employed in the recently opened local enterprise development unit offices at Upper Galwally, Belfast.

Dr. Boyson: At present, 69.

Road Tax

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will give his best assessment of the number of civil servants involved in collecting road tax in Northern Ireland;

(2) how much revenue was raised by road tax in Northern Ireland is the financial year 1984-85;

(3) how many road fund licences were issued in the financial year 1984-85 in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information is as follows:

(1) 177, (2) £53,250,356, (3) 653,795.

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much revenue it is estimated was lost through evasion of road tax in Northern Ireland in the financial year 1984-85.

Mr. Chris Patten: It is not possible to estimate accurately the amount of revenue lost through evasion of road tax. However, my Department recovered £920,600 by way of mitigating penalties and court awards from persons detected using or keeping unlicensed vehicles during that year.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the total paid in housing benefit from all sources in Northern Ireland in each of the last two years.

Mr. Chris Patten: The estimated amounts are as follows:

1983-84	*85,309,000
1984-85	97,254,000

* Includes help with housing costs under the supplementary benefit scheme and the former rent and rates rebate and rent allowance schemes prior to 21 November 1983.

Heating Allowances

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much has been paid by the Department of Health and Social Services in Northern Ireland for additional heating allowance in the last year.

Mr. Chris Patten: The estimated amount of supplementary benefit heating additions paid in 1983-84, the latest year for which figures are available, was £19,416,000.

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people in Northern Ireland in receipt of supplementary benefit in each of the last five years also received additional heating allowance.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information is as follows:

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

University Teachers

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many university teachers were employed in universities in the United Kingdom for each year since 1978-79; how many held temporary posts; how many held permanent posts; and what are the equivalent figures for research staff.

Mr. Brooke: Information on permanent and temporary posts in universities is not available centrally. The numbers of academic staff employed in universities in the United Kingdom are as follows:

	Total	Full-time		*Part-time
		Teaching and research	Research only
1978-79	41,867	34,378	7,489	1,521
1979-80	43,358	35,021	8,337	1,587
1980-81	44,092	35,107	8,985	1,678
1981-82	43,924	34,661	9,263	1,738
1982-83	43,083	32,806	10,277	2,371
1983-84	43,149	32,429	10,720	2,865

* The breakdown of part-time staff between teaching and research is not readily available.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many university lecturers have taken early retirement or been made redundant since 1979; and what has been the cost to the Government in compensation and redundancy payments.

Mr. Brooke: Under the special arrangements announced on 25 January 1982, at column 275, for the compensation of redundant university academic staff, approximately £94·5 million was paid to 3,318 academic staff who retired between 1 August 1981 and 31 September 1984. Information is not readily available about payments to staff who left before or after this period, which was that to which the special arrangements applied.

Independent Schools

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many independent schools there are in England; and what information he has as to how many children attend them, as to the proportion this represents of the total school population, and as to the comparable figures for each of the last five years.

Mr. Dunn: Following is the information for England:

	Number of Independent Schools	Number of Pupils in Independent Schools	Proportion of Pupils in Independent Schools Per cent.
January 1980	2,351	527,781	5·9
January 1981	2,342	527,230	6·0
January 1982	2,340	521,132	6·1
January 1983	2,344	516,494	6·2
January 1984	2,333	515,218	6·3

Shortage Subjects (Pay)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what discussions took place between officials of his Department and the National Union of Teachers before he concluded that teachers of mathematics, science and shortage subjects should be eligible for higher pay awards than other teachers.

Sir Keith Joseph: I have reached no such conclusion. My open letter of 21 May to the education chairmen of the local authority associations, a copy of which is in the Library, said:

"The Government envisages an agreement which would require employers to promote more teachers than under the existing system to the higher salary scales, exercising their discretion in doing so in the light of the quality of teachers' work and the demand for their skills and qualifications elsewhere."

The letter also said that I should be happy to discuss its content with the teacher unions.

Special Education

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list (a) for each local education authority and (b) for metropolitan counties, shire counties and outer London boroughs, the average percentage of expenditure allocated to children with special needs spent on (i) children educated within the local education authority, (ii) children educated outside the local education authority and (iii) the number and proportion of children with special needs represented by (a) and (b) in each case, at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Dunn [pursuant to his reply, 21 June 1985, c. 241-42]: The information requested is given in the following table.

Local education authority	Proportion of total net expenditure on special education spent in 1983-84		Numbers of pupils

TRANSPORT

British Rail (Rolling Stock)

Dr. Michael Clark asked the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with the chairman of British Rail on the condition of passenger rolling stock, so far as the provision of new carriages and refurbishment of old ones is concerned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: It is the BR Board's responsibility to decide on the requirements for new rolling stock or the refurbishment of vehicles. Where necessary I discuss investment proposals with the board. For example I had talks recently with BR's joint managing director about the rolling stock implications of the London interconnection proposal. More generally, we have since October 1983 approved investment in new passenger vehicles worth £215 million, and BR has itself approved further expenditure on refurbishment. For the future, BR plans to spend £527 million over the next five years on modernising its passenger traction and rolling stock fleet.

Roads (Public Inquiries)

Mr. Waller asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those proposals for new or improved roads which have been the subject of a public inquiry and are still awaiting decision, showing in each case the date when the inquiry closed and the date when the inspector submitted his report.

Mrs. Chalker: The following schemes in the national road programme for England are awaiting a decision following a public inquiry:

Singapore Airlines (Manchester)

Mr. Hargreaves asked the Secretary of State for Transport what communication his Department has had with Manchester international airport in relation to his consent to Singapore Airlines' application to open new services from Manchester to Singapore in April 1986.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The chairman of the Manchester International Airport Authority has expressed publicly his delight and appreciation of the decision to allow Singapore Airlines to operate services to Manchester.

Sir Walter Clegg asked the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made in establishing a commercial agreement between British Airways and Singapore Airlines to enable SIA to open its new services to Manchester.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I understand that substantive discussions will take place between the two airlines as soon as SIA has reached a decision on the routeing of its services to Manchester.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Pharmacists (Pay)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the detailed terms of the new contract between his Department and the Pharmaceutical Service Negotiating Committee; what are the various cut-off points in terms of numbers of prescriptions issued which will be used to determine pharmacists' remuneration; upon what criteria the cut-off points were determined; and what assessment he has made of the effects of the new contract upon the level of remuneration of pharmacists within each band.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The new contract is a lengthy document containing much detail. The full text was placed in the Library on 17 June. The main features are:

A system of annual negotiations and annual cost inquiries to a fixed timetable and a fixed settlement date of 1 April each year. This will prevent as far as practicable the accrual of large sums of arrears, and the need for massive retrospective adjustment. This will reduce the number of disputes between Government and profession that the old arrangements had an in-built tendency to cause.

A system to ensure that the National Health Service obtains and pays for only those pharmaceutical services which the NHS and its patients need. Family Practitioner Committees will decide whether the needs of patients justify the expenditure on a new NHS contract, and will refuse an application if this is not the case. The only judgment will be one of patient need. This arrangement will ensure that there is a reasonable but not excessive supply of pharmacies with NHS contracts.

An increased level of financial support by means of minimum income guarantee to essential small pharmacies to ensure continuing access to NHS services in thinly populated, mainly rural areas.

Greater encouragement to cost effective and efficient practice through changes in the remuneration structure.

For two years, a system of payments to small pharmacies which wish to relinquish the NHS contract, helping pharmacists who find themselves locked into unattractive contracts to withdraw.

A modified system of cost collection which will produce some savings which will be shared equally between Government and the profession, producing some funds to help implement development in the pharmacist's role.

A sound basis for developing that future role following discussion of the recommendations of the Nuffield inquiry.

All the details, including the cut-off points to be used in determining remuneration, emerged from a long period of negotiation with the committee which represents all contractors. The effect of the proposals on average remuneration within various bands is set out in the table.

Chemists remuneration: structure of fees

Option 12: graduated dispensing fee of:— 120 51 62

Consultants (Distinction Awards)

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the services for which distinction awards are made to medical consultants; how many persons are in receipt of these awards annually; what they cost; how much individually can be received; and whether such awards are available to nursing staff.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The criteria used by the Advisory Committee on Distinction Awards in making recommendations for awards were set out by the immediate past chairman, Sir Stanley Clayton, in an article published in "Health Trends" (November 1979), copies of which are in the Library. They include direct service to patients or their general practitioners, improvement of the service, training and teaching, research, medical administration, and clinical or academic distinction. Hard work and outstanding service to the National Health Service may alone be sufficient reason for an award, particularly at the B and C grades of award.

The present numbers and value of each grade of award is:

	Number	Value £
A+	162	24,930
A	602	19,200
B	1,649	10,970
C	3,792	4,890

These are in accordance with the recommendations of the Review Body on Doctors' and Dentists' Remuneration as set out in its fifteenth report and accepted by the Government. We do not maintain records to show the amounts actually paid out in distinction awards since the award holder is paid pro rata to the amount of work he does for the National Health Service. The total amount authorised with effect from 1 April 1985 is £52,229,470 of which it is estimated that £43,350,460 is paid.

Distinction awards are made only to consultants and community physicians in the National Health Service and are not available to nursing staff.

Drug Abuse

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will estimate the amount of money spent by each district health authority within the North-East Thames regional health authority since 1982 on (a) alcoholism and (b) drug dependency;

(2) if he will publish the guidelines on the expenditure by district health authorities on drug rehabilitation.

Mr. John Patten: Information on the expenditure by district health authorities on services for alcohol and drug misusers is not available centrally.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total amount allocated by his Department to counter (a) all forms of drug abuse and (b) heroin abuse in particular, in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available; and for each year how much of the total allocation was spent on (i) publicity and advertising, (ii) funding of rehabilitation or treatment centres for drug users and (iii) grants to other organisations.

Mr. John Patten: Information is not available in the form requested. The cost of treatment provided for drug misuers by the family practitioner and general psychiatric and other hospital services is not separately identified. £630,000 was made available from central funds in 1984-85 for the Department's drug misuse, education and information campaign including publicity and advertising and £2 million has been allocated to this campaign for 1985-86. Central funding for services for the treatment of rehabilitation of drug misusers for the past 10 years has been as follows:

1975-76	74,000
1976-77	104,000
1977-78	107,597
1978-79	180,593
1979-80	210,842
1980-81	285,690
1981-82	347,360
1982-83	433,174
1983-84	1,351,539
1984-85	2,453,967

Mr. Higgins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make additional resources available for the Worthing district health authority's proposals to help deal with the problem of drug addiction.

Mr. John Patten: An application under the central funding initiative from Worthing health authority is currently being considered.

Mr. J. Broad

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report a summary of his response to the hon. Member for Romsey and Waterside regarding the social security case of Mr. J. Broad of Wenda, 5 Graemar cottages, Sherfield English, Romsey, Hampshire.

Mr Whitney: I have received a letter from Mr. Broad, and a copy of his letter from my hon. Friend. A reply will be sent shortly and I shall arrange for a copy to be sent to my hon. Friend. It is not the Department's practice to make public details relating to an individual's claim for benefit.

Housing Benefit

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the local authorities he assesses to be making full use of their powers to prevent abuse in housing benefit, referred to in paragraph 3·9 of the report of the housing benefit review team, Cmnd. 9520.

Mr. Newton: The housing benefit review team's conclusion that only a minority of authorities are making full use of existing powers to prevent abuse was based on information from a sample of local authorities.

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the present expenditure by local authorities on local schemes of housing benefit; and what costs these represent to central Government.

Mr. Newton: Information from authorities' initial housing benefit subsidy claims indicates that benefit expenditure on local schemes will be about £30 million in 1985-86. Expenditure on local schemes does not qualify for direct subsidy but, in the case of rent rebates and allowance, it counts as relevant expenditure for block grant purposes for local authorities in England and Wales.

NHS Statistics (Rugby)

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many doctors, nurses and midwives are now employed in the Rugby district health authority; and how that compares with each year since 1979.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Such figures as we hold centrally are shown in the table. However, as the important footnotes make clear, these figures are by no means the complete picture and are of limited practical value, particularly on medical staff numbers.

NHS directly employed staff in Rugby District Health Authority in post at 30 September (whole-time equivalents)

	1979	1980	1981	1982	*1983
Junior Medical Staff† in the hospital and Community Health Service	29	29	29	23	29
Nursing Staff‡	385	381	‖	416	405
Midwifery Staff‡	34	31	‖	29	31

* Latest date for which information for all three groups is available.

† Consultants and Senior Registrars are excluded from the figures as they are employed at RHA and Teaching District levels, and we have no information on their commitment in industrial districts. Also excludes Hospital Practitioners, part-time medical officers (Clinical Assistants), Occasional Sessional Staff in the Community Health Service and Locums.

‡ Includes agency nursing and midwifery staff.

‖ Information held centrally on nursing and midwifery staff in this district is incomplete for September 1981.

In view of the many exclusions, my hon. Friend may wish to seek the latest and more comprehensive figures from the chairman of the Rugby health authority.

NHS (Private Contractors)

Mr. Pendry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to ensure that health authorities make a full and complete investigation of the credentials and previous experience of contractors, before awarding them hospital domestic cleaning or other contract; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is for health authorities to satisfy themselves of the suitability and competence of companies before inviting tenders from them. There is no need for districts to make copious enquiries of each contractor if regions have compiled lists of approved contractors for that region.

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will insert mucodyne carbocisteine syrup on the limited list of drugs to assist elderly patients with bronchitis and emphysema.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply on 25 June, at column 385. We are making arrangements for the committee which will review the selected list to consider mucodyne and other similar mucolytic agents at its first meeting. We will announce details of the committee soon.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether, following experience of the limited list, he will reconsider the exclusion of dimethicone antacids;

(2) whether, pursuant to the reply on 24 April, Official Report, column 500, he will add xylometazoline nasal spray to the limited list of drugs as an alternative to ephedrine or xylometazoline nose drops for children with sinusitis or catarrh, so as to avoid the need to drip unpalatable fluid into a child's nose;

(3) whether he will put Celevac granules on the limited list in the interest of elderly patients who have difficulty in swallowing Celevac tablets.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We will shortly be setting up the committee to review the selected list and keep it up to date. The committee will be free to consider the need for these or any other drugs.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether, pursuant to the reply on 24 April, Official Report, column 500, he will outline the alternative drugs under the limited list suitable for a child with mild sinusitis or eustachian catarrh where sudafed elixir is discovered to produce symptoms of hyperactivity and sleeplessness in that child.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to him on 24 April, at columns 500-501, in which I listed three drugs that doctors might prescribe.

All systemic nasal decongestants contain ingredients that may cause hyperactivity and sleeplessness in children. Psuedoephedrine, the active ingredient of sudafed elixir, is no more likely to cause such symptoms than other drugs in this group.

Doctors (Secretarial Payments)

Mr. Franks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will now make it his policy to alter the rules governing secretarial payments so as to enable a general practitioner to obtain reimbursement for secretarial work carried out by his wife in the practice.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The expenses incurred by general medical practitioners in providing general medical services, including the salaries of ancillary staff, are returned in full to the profession. This includes salaries of dependent relatives. Some expenses are returned direct to individual doctors incurring them and the remainder are returned indirectly, on an average basis, through fees and allowances paid to all GPs.

Seventy per cent. of the salaries of certain ancillary staff are directly reimbursed, but this arrangement has never applied to dependent relatives. A single-handed rural doctor in receipt of a rural practice or inducement payment employing a dependent relative or a doctor employing a dependent relative with a recognised nursing qualification may, however, receive an allowance (currently £1,760) provided the duties performed are qualifying ones. Qualifying duties include secretarial work.

We have followed the policy of successive Governments in deciding that we cannot agree to the inclusion of dependent relatives in the main arrangements for the direct reimbursement of ancillary staff salaries. We have, however, agreed to consider whether changes could be made to the present arrangements, at no additional cost to the taxpayer, in respect of those already covered by the related ancillary staff scheme and at the present level of expenditure incurred.

Cervical Smear Tests

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the backlog of cervical smear tests in cytology laboratories; and if he is taking any steps to speed up the examination of the results of such tests.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I am well aware of some serious local problems. Recent backlogs are a result of the tragic events at Oxford earlier this year. The resultant publicity has caused many more women to seek a test. Because most cervical cancers develop slowly, some delay in processing does not detract from the value of having a smear taken. However, delays do cause anxiety to some women and backlogs are demoralising for laboratory staff.

Delays in particular laboratories are a matter for local management to resolve and I have asked health authorities to pay particular attention to the problem. However, we are keen to discover whether there are any general problems which can be tackled at the national level. I am particularly concerned about the need to train adequate numbers of staff, as it is the need for trained staff which is causing most of the delays in increasing the pace of work in laboratories at the moment. I am, in the near future, meeting representatives of the British Society for Clinical Cytology to discuss this and other problems. In addition, we are having discussions with representatives of the relevant medical disciplines, including pathology, to explore a number of suggestions for improving the effectiveness of the cervical cancer screening programme.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how long it is currently taking for the cytology laboratory at Christie hospital, Manchester, to examine and report back to general practitioners on cervical smear tests; if he is satisfied with the present staffing level in the laboratory; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The cervical cytology service at the Christie hospital is the responsibility of the South Manchester district health authority. The right hon. Member may therefore wish to make inquiries of the chairman of the authority.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish figures showing the average amount and number of additional requirements to supplementary benefit by category of additional requirement.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 10 May 1985, c. 542]: I regret that there were errors in the information given in my earlier reply. The number of supplementary benefit claimants in receipt of blind additions and age additions should be as follows:

Category	Average amount £	Number of additional requirements (000's)
Age addition:
One pensioner aged over 80 in assessment unit	·25	417
Two pensioners aged over 80 in assessment unit	·50	18
Blind addition:
Claimant or wife	1·25	35
Claimant and wife	2·50	1

Children (Benefits)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he can give the latest estimate of the number of children in families in receipt of (a) family income supplement, (b) supplementary benefit and (c) housing benefit.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 6 June 1985, c. 232]: Our best estimates of the number of dependent children in families receiving the specified benefits, at the latest available dates, are as follows:

	No. of children	Latest available date
Family Income Supplement (FIS)	417,000	March 1985
Supplementary Benefit	1·8 million	December 1983
Housing Benefit	2·9 million	November 1984

Notes

1. The housing benefit figure includes about 1·7 million children whose families are receiving "certificated" housing benefit and who consequently are receiving supplementary benefit as well.
2. Some children will be included twice because for example their families are receiving both FIS and housing benefit. It is not possible to quantify the overlap.

Newcastle Office (Members' Correspondence)

Mr. Gale asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current delay that hon. Members may expect before receipt of replies to inquiries resulting from the recent prolonged industrial action at the Newcastle offices of his Department.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 17 June 1985, c. 49]: Inquiries by hon. Members which are referred to central pensions branch, Newcastle are normally answered within 10 days. However, during and in the aftermath of the recent industrial dispute some delays have inevitably occurred. If my hon. Friend has a particular case in mind and lets me have details I shall be pleased to have it investigated.

Hospitals (Infections)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list those serious outbreaks of infection that have occurred in hospitals in each of the last five years that have been reported to the Public Health Laboratory Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 19 June 1985, c. 169]: The hospital outbreaks that have been reported to PHLS in the last five years are as follows:

Year	Outbreaks
1980	13	(Salmonellas 4 Clostridium 9)
1981	8	(Salmonellas 5 Clostridium 3)
1982	15	(Salmonellas 4 Clostridium 11)
1983	15	(Salmonellas 9 Clostridium 6)
1984 (provisional)	19	(Salmonellas 4 Clostridium 15)

DEFENCE

Boarding School Allowances

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total Government expenditure on boarding school allowances for children of armed forces personnel; and what proportion of the children in boarding schools have parents stationed in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lee: The total Government expenditure on boarding school allowances for children of armed forces personnel in 1984-85 was £78 million. Seventy-five per cent. of the total number of children attending boarding schools have parents stationed in the United Kingdom.

Woolwich Arsenal

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the estimated construction cost of the proposed new office building at Woolwich arsenal; when work is expected to start; and how long it is expected to take;

(2) when he expects to reach a decision on the size and position of the proposed new office block for quality assurance staff at Woolwich arsenal;

(3) whether he has reached a conclusion on the future of the Royal Laboratory pavilions at Woolwich arsenal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Following the creation of the directorate general of defence quality assurance my Department has embarked upon studies which, among other things, will later this year indicate the future best use of land and buildings at the Royal Arsenal Woolwich including the Royal Laboratory pavilions. No decisions have yet been taken regarding the size, position, cost, or date of commencement of a new office block.

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the present use of the brass foundry at Woolwich arsenal by the National Maritime Museum to come to an end.

Mr. Lee: It is unlikely that the building will be vacated within the next three years.

Royal Navy and Royal Fleet Auxiliary

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all visits to Chilean ports by ships of the Royal Navy and the Royal Fleet Auxiliary from January 1982 until the present day.

Mr. Stanley: For Royal Navy ship visits to Chilean ports from July 1982 until the present day, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 11 June at column 431. In the first half of 1982, there was one such visit —that by HMS Endurance in January.

There has been one Royal Fleet auxiliary visit to a Chilean port from January 1982 until the present day—that by RFA Regent in March 1983.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all Royal Navy ships and Royal Fleet Auxiliaries which travelled to or from the Falklands area via the Panama canal from January 1982 until the present.

Mr. Stanley: Royal Navy ships and Royal Fleet auxiliaries have travelled to or from the Falklands area via the Panama canal on the following occasions from January 1982 until the present day:

Ship	Date of canal passage
HMS Hecate	January 1983
RFA Regent	April 1983
HMS Falmouth	August 1983
HMS Herald	October 1983
HMS Endurance	December 1983
HMS Herald	September 1984
HMS Endurance	May 1985

Gordon Barracks

Mr. Pollock asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now make a statement on the future use of Gordon barracks, Bridge of Don, Aberdeen.

Mr. Heseltine: We announced last year, following a detailed examination of junior recruit traning, reductions in the size of the junior training organisation. As part of this process the two smallest training barracks, at Bridge of Don and Cwrt-y-Gollen, were earmarked for possible closure. Since then we have examined the possible alternative uses for these two barracks, and I am pleased to announce that we have decided to retain the majority of Gordon barracks for Territorial Army purposes. This will relieve overcrowding in existing Territorial Army sites in Aberdeen and will enable the inadequate facilities at the Hardgate Territorial Army centre to be given up.

This decision means that the maximum military use will be made of this facility while at the same time ensuring that the manpower and financial savings arising out of the rationalisation of junior training will still be achieved.

An announcement on the future use of Cwrt-y-Gollen is also being made today.

Prince of Wales Depot

Mr. Harvey asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future use of the Prince of Wales depot at Cwrt-y-Gollen, Crickhowell.

Mr. Heseltine: We announced last year, following a detailed examination of the junior recruit training, reductions in the size of the junior training organisation. As part of this process the two smallest training barracks, at Bridge of Don and Cwrt-y-Gollen, were earmarked for possible closure. Since then we have examined the possible alternative uses for these two barracks, and I am pleased to announce that we have decided to retain the Cwrt-y-Gollen barracks as a training camp, thereby enabling the majority of the less satisfactory facilities at Monmouth to be given up. In addition, the barracks will provide a Territorial Army centre for a hospital detachment thus saving the cost of having to build elsewhere.

This decision means that the maximum military use will be make of this facility while at the same time ensuring that the manpower and financial savings arising out of the rationalisation of junior training will still be achieved.

An announcement on the future use of the Gordon Barracks, Bridge of Don is also being made today.

NATO (Short Range Nuclear Forces)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to announce a decision on the modernisation of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's short-range nuclear forces.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 21 June 1985, c. 246]: I cannot at present add to the final communiqué of NATO nuclear planning group meeting on 26-27 March 1985, a copy of which is in the Library.

BOAR (Tactical Nuclear Weapons)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether any bilateral discussions have taken place between the United States and the United Kingdom Governments on the modernisation of United States tactical nuclear weapons made available to the British Army of the Rhine; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 21 June 1985, c. 247]: There have been no formal bilateral discussions to date in relation to the modernisation of the present generation of United States tactical nuclear weapons in service with BOAR but this issue is being considered in the context of SACEUR's report to the NATO nuclear planning group held on 26-27 March. This report dealt with the measures SACEUR considers necessary to ensure the maintenance of a survivable, responsive and effective nuclear force structure within the reduced stockpile levels decided by Ministers at Montebello in August 1983.

Polaris

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give in current and constant prices the annual expenditure on Polaris from 1963 to the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Butler [pursuant to his reply, 21 June 1985, c. 247]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement to the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington (Mr. Boyes) on 1 March 1985 at column 301, which gave estimates of the capital costs of the Polaris, Chevaline and Polaris remotoring programmes at 1984-85 prices. Annual expenditure figures for these programmes are not available in the form requested. However, I would refer the hon. Gentleman to successive statements on the defence Estimates which have indicated the overall levels of expenditure on the strategic nuclear forces.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 27 June 1985

PRIME MINISTER

Nuclear-powered Submarines

Q25. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister if she is satisfied with the capability of Her Majesty's nuclear-powered fleet submarines to keep in continuous contact with surface ships; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I am satisfied that the capability of the Royal Navy's Fleet submarines to keep in contact with surface ships, which they are shadowing, is well up to the level achievable within the constraints of current technology.

Disarmament

Q56. Mr. Latham asked the Prime Minister whether she will make a statement on the latest position regarding disarmament negotiations in which the United Kingdom is directly involved; and whether any early progress is envisaged.

The Prime Minister: The Geneva conference on disarmament reconvened on June 11. With our Allies we shall be pressing in particular for progress on verification issues in the negotiations for a worldwide chemical weapons ban. At the MBFR talks in Vienna, an Eastern proposal was tabled earlier this year. This is now being studied carefully. The Stockholm conference on disarmament in Europe is now in its sixth session. We and our Allies are participating in detailed discussion of the proposals tabled with the aim of reaching agreement on practical confidence and security building measures. The prospects for progress in these negotiations will depend on the willingness of all other participants to agree on the necessity for balanced and verifiable measures.

Crown Immunity

Q140. Mr. Ashley asked the Prime Minister if she will set up an inter-departmental inquiry to assess the desirability of ending Crown immunity.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Engagements

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 27 June?

Mr. Pike asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 27 June.

Mr. Leigh asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 27 June.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 27 June.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 27 June.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I shall be travelling to Milan for a meeting of the European Council.

Agricultural Structures Regulation

Dr. David Clark asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the co-ordination between the Department of the Environment and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on the consultations on the implementation of the European Commission's new agricultural structures regulation.

The Prime Minister: Officials of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food have kept in close touch with officials of the Department of the Environment over the implementation of the environmental aspects of the European Community's new agricultural structures regulations.

Trade Statistics

Mr. Hickmet asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement about the current imbalance in trade between Japan and the United Kingdom, the European Economic Community and the United States of America; and what the consequences are for world trade stability if current trends are not reversed.

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom, the European Community and the United States each had a substantial deficit in their visible trade with Japan in 1984. We and our Community partners have expressed strong concern about the mounting trade and current account surpluses being accumulated by Japan and about the consequent strain placed upon the multilateral trading system through the impetus given to protectionist pressures.

WALES

Agriculture Unions (Representations)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received during the past three months from the agricultural unions in Wales; and if he will list the issues raised by them.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I am in regular contact with the farming unions in Wales on most agricultural issues, particularly those affecting the livestock and dairying sectors.

Apprentices

Sir Raymond Gower asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest information regarding the numbers of apprentices in Welsh industry and the numbers who commenced apprenticeships during the past 12 months.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: The information is not available in the form requested. However, the latest estimate taken from the Department of Employment's regular survey of employers relating to March 1985 is that there are some 2,800 apprentices in manufacturing industry in Wales. No information is available centrally on the numbers of commencements of apprenticeships.

MV Bridgeness

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the environmental effects of the MV Bridgeness running aground on the Hats and Barrels reef off south-west Wales on 16 June.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Initial indications are that about 2,100 birds have been affected by oil to varying degrees following the oil spillage resulting from the MV Bridgeness incident off the south-west Wales coast. The birds were mainly on the islands of Grassholme, Skomer, Ramsey and Bishops and Clerks and were principally guillemots, puffins and razor bills. There were very few gannets affected. In addition, about 400 dead birds have been taken off the shore.

There is no risk to grey seals or otters, and there is no direct effect of the oil spill on fisheries in the area. No significant quantities of oil have reached the mainland shore, but local authorities continue to keep a close watch on the situation.

As it will be several weeks before a full assessment can be made of the long-term effects of the incident on birdlife in this important breeding area, I shall write to the hon. Gentleman when this has been completed.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Demergers

62. Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to amend the legislation relating to demergers.

Mr. Fletcher: On 25 May 1984 the Department of Trade and Industry published a consultative document on the implementation of the sixth company law directive on the division of public limited companies, of which a copy was placed in the Library. A further document will be published later this year.

Japan

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action the Government are seeking to take against the Japanese offering of unusually favourable credit terms to secure projects for Japanese firms.

Mr. Fletcher: The Government will raise the question of official Japanese financing terms for international projects in the OECD. It will be seeking a new definition of "tied-aid" credit within the OECD consensus agreement. This would embrace the type of credit arrangements currently provided by the Japanese Government, and would subject them to greater international discipline and transparency.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the access of British financial, banking and other institutions and companies to Japanese financial, insurance, commercial and stockbroking markets; and what representations he has made to open up such markets to British companies.

Mr. Fletcher: Japanese financial markets are still extensively protected. Despite some progress, British access to them remains much more limited than Japanese access to the City of London; moreover, Japanese regulation also effects the extent of business opportunities. The imbalance is particularly heavy in the securities dealing sector, and needs to be redressed. My right hon. Friend made representations during his visit to Japan in April. We will at every opportunity continue to press the Japanese authorities not to delay decisions implementing the policy of liberalisation to which they are committed.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list those non-tariff trade barriers in Japan known to his Department to have existed at some time since 1979 and those which are existing today; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: The most recent study of non-tariff barriers in Japan was conducted in 1984 by the European Business Council in Tokyo, a copy of which has been placed in the Library. Since 1979 some progress has been made in reducing the incidence of non-tariff barriers; for example, the increased acceptance of foreign test data. Those that remain are the subject of representations through the European Community and bilaterally.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what complaints he has received from British companies and other interested bodies since 1979 about Japan's non-tariff barriers.

Mr. Fletcher: My Department receives a number of complaints from British companies and other interested bodies about non-tariff barriers in Japan. The sectors affected include telecommunications, tobacco, pharmaceuticals and medical equipment, electric appliances, cosmetics, food additives and motor vehicles. In addition, more general problems have been raised involving labelling, counterfeiting and the organisation of the retail and distribution system.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the value by which British exports to Japan have been reduced as a result of Japanese non-tariff trade barriers.

Mr. Fletcher: Non-tariff barriers can take many forms, including, for example, the structure of the retail and distribution system. It is not practicable to offer an estimate of their effect.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list those companies known to his Department to have been affected adversely by Japan's non-tariff trade barriers since 1979.

Mr. Fletcher: No. Such information is normally given in confidence.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on how many occasions he or his Department have made representations to the relevent Japanese authorities about Japan's non-tariff trade barriers; what was the response in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: Representations are made both bilaterally and through the European Community on the basis of a list of outstanding problems. While Japan has made some concessions on non-tariff barriers a number of problems still remain.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about Japan's predatory pricing policies and the dumping of credit to obtain international capital contracts; what representations he has made to the Japanese authorities about those policies; and what the Japanese authorities have done as a result.

Mr. Fletcher: We have at all levels made clear to the Japanese authorities our view that some of their financing tactics to secure international projects, though within the letter of the international rules, are nevertheless inconsistent with Japan's stated determination to limit its trade surplus. As the Japanese Government know, we will be seeking further examination of these credit issues in the OECD. My right hon. Friend the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary and I have conveyed our concerns clearly to the Japanese ambassador here in London.

We remain hopeful that our efforts to sustain the mutual benefits of a responsible trade relationship between the United Kingdom and Japan will succeed.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the current imbalance in trade between the United Kingdom and Japan and between Japan and the EEC as a whole; and if he will estimate what the imbalance will be if the current trend continues for the next five years.

Mr. Fletcher: In 1984 the United Kingdom had a visible trade deficit with Japan of £2·8 billion while the EC's deficit stood at $10·1 billion. Future estimates are subject to great uncertainty, but if current trends continue, the forecast is that Japan's trade surplus will continue to rise.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what study he has conducted into the effect of the value of the Japanese yen upon trade between the United Kingdom and Japan and between the United Kingdom and other countries where Japan is competing against British companies.

Mr. Fletcher: Both the Government and British companies competing overseas keep a close watch on the effective exchange rate of the yen against sterling and other trading currencies. The competitiveness of exports and imports depends upon a wide range of factors, including interest rates and financing arrangements, as well as the price and quality of the goods and services offered.

BT Shares

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, further to the answer of 13 June, Official Report, column 499-500, what steps he has taken to satisfy himself that no City firm made allocations of British Telecom shares to individual employees in amounts greater than the limit of 800 shares applied to ordinary investors.

Mr. Butcher [pursuant to his reply, 19 June 1985, c. 143]: Allocations of shares under the United Kingdom public offer were made by six receiving banks according to an allotment policy announced by my hon. Friend on 3 December 1984. Under this policy all non-preferential applications were subject to the same maximum allotment of 800 shares regardless of who submitted them. I am satisfied that this allotment policy was fully implemented by the receiving banks. Only substantial institutions and funds were eligible for the placing arrangements described in my answer of 13 June and the brokers acting as intermediaries were required to check this at the time of the offer. A subsequent check of the 2,127 applications submitted under those arrangements has shown that none was in the names of employees of City firms, though three applications for a total of 31,900 shares were erroneously submitted by three employees of an eligible fund based overseas, following a misunderstanding of the arrangements. I understand that the profits from the acquisition of those shares have now been surrendered to charity.

DEFENCE

Royal Navy (Vessel Orders)

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current value of his Department's orders of surface vessels and submarines for the Royal Navy; and what is the estimated value of such orders for vessels to be placed in 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Lee: Following the acceptance of Ark Royal from the shipbuilder later this month, the value of current orders will be approximately £2,500 million at 1984-85 prices. Orders for 1985 and 1986 will be announced as and when appropriate.

SCOTLAND

Fishing Industry

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what contribution the fishing industry made to the Scottish economy, as a proportion of gross domestic product, in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. John MacKay: I estimate that in 1983, the latest year for which figures are available, the Scottish fishing industry — that is, the catching sector — contributed rather less than one half of 1 per cent. of total Scottish gross domestic product.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the proportion of the Scottish work force employed in the fishing industry and activities allied with it.

Mr. John MacKay: I estimate that about 1 per cent. of the Scottish work force is employed in the fishing industry and related sectors such as fish processing and distribution.

Labour Statistics

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people below the age of 25 years are currently unemployed in (a) the Greenock travel-to-work area, (b) Strathclyde region and (c) Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's letter of 22 October 1984. The information requested is available in the Library.

Agricultural Development Projects

Dame Judith Hart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the research and development projects in agriculture and agricultural engineering, respectively, which were approved for financial support in 1985-86 by DAFS and those in each category from which support has since been withdrawn.

Mr. Younger: Following is a list of the programmes of research approved for 1985-86 at the Scottish agricultural research institutes and the Scottish agricultural colleges. Support has been withdrawn from none.

Programm	Objectives
1. Dairy cattle: milk and products	To improve reproductive performance and to reduce losses of young animals.
2. Beef cattle	To improve genetic qualities related to productivity.
3. Sheep	To improve the utilisation of conventional and novel feeds.
4. Pigs	To reduce the effects of disease and to improve animal health. To develop more efficient systems of production. To improve consumer quality and safety of food product.
5. Poultry	To improve reproductive performance and to reduce losses of young chicks. To improve genetic qualities related to productivity. To improve the utilisation of conventional and novel feeds. To reduce the effects of disease and to improve animal health. To develop more efficient systems of production. To improve consumer quality and safety of food product.
6. Animals general	To increase productivity and to improve product quality in relation to market requirements. To increase productivity and to improve product quality in relation to market requirements. To improve use of animal wastes and to reduce or remove pollution hazards.
7. Grass and forage legumes	To promote improved output by variety testing and work related to genetical characteristics. To increase input efficiency and improve crop management. To improve sward characteristics of lowland, upland and hill grazings. To reduce loss by improved control. To assess environmental effects in order to alleviate adverse effects and to exploit favourable factors. To evaluate economic factors. To improve production methods and nutritive value of conserved forage. To improve amenity grass and to establish cultivars suitable for various amenity purposes. to promote efficient seed production.
8. Cereals	To promote improved cereal production by variety testing and work related to genetical characteristics. To increase input efficiency and crop managementTo reduce crop loss due to disease, pests and weeds. To improve harvesting practices, storage and product quality.
9. Other arable crops, potatoes, roots, forage brassicae, pulses etc.	To increase productivity and to improve product quality in relation to market/feeding requirements.
10. Horticultural crops	To increase productivity and to improve quality and seasonal availability in relation to market requirements of field vegetables, soft fruit, protected crops and ornamentals.
11. Crops general	To increase productivity and to improve product quality and seasonal availability in relation to market requirements.

Agricultural Research

Dame Judith Hart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what information he has as to how much was spent by industry in each of the last six years to fund agricultural research in Scottish universities;

(2) what funding has been provided by industry to agricultural research in Scotland in each of the last six years;

(3) what commitments have been made by industry for the funding of research in agriculture in Scotland for 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88.

Mr. Younger: The information is not available.

Scottish Institute of Agricultural Engineering

Dame Judith Hart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what funding has been provided by industry to the Scottish Institute of Agricultural Engineering in each of the last six years.

Mr. Younger: The figures are as follows:

1979-80	4,940
1980-81	6,879
1981-82	1,304
1982-83	60
1983-84	Nil
1984-85	7,569

Dame Judith Hart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what commitments have been made by industry for the funding of research for work at the Scottish Institute of Agricultural Engineering for 1985-86, 1986-87, and 1987-88.

Mr. Younger: The value of commitments entered into at this period in time is as follows:

1985-86	31,847
1986-87	11,500
1987-88	Nil

NORTHERN IRELAND

Local Enterprise Development Unit

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the average cost of each job created by the Local Enterprise Development Unit in each of the last five years.

Dr. Boyson: The information is as follows:

Financial years	Average cost per job promoted £
1980-81	3,433
1981-82	3,217
1982-83	3,452
1983-84	3,553
1984-85	4,399

Ewe Premium

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he proposes to issue payment of the ewe premium in the current year.

Dr. Boyson: Payment of the ewe premium is made after the end of the relevant European Community marketing year, except for flocks in the less favoured areas where a partial advance is made. Payments for the marketing year which ended on 26 May will commence shortly after the rate has been determined by the Commission.

Calf Subsidy

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he proposes to issue payment of the calf subsidy for calves purchased in early March.

Dr. Boyson: Payments of calf premium in respect of calves certified as eligible in February and March have been made since late March, 11,125 claims in respect of 74,000 calves have been processed, and some 160 claims remain to be paid. Payments are being made as quickly as possible.

Criminal Injuries (Compensation)

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will publish in the Official Report a table giving the amounts in each year since 1 January 1977 of payments made to members of the security forces (Royal Ulster Constabulary, Royal Ulster Constabulary Reserve, British Army and Ulster Defence Regiment) under the Criminal Injuries Compensation (NI) Order 1977;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report a table giving the amounts in each year since 1 January 1977 of payments made to civilians under the Criminal Injuries Compensation (NI) Order 1977.

Mr. Scott: The information can be provided only in relation to financial years and is as follows:

Year	Payments to civilians £	Payments to members of the security forces £	Total £
1977-78*	4,204	1,086	5,290
1978-79	205,358	93,435	298,793

1984-85	4,948,306	3,468,510	8,416,816

*Note: The figures for 1977-78 are from 9 August 1977 when the Criminal Injuries (Compensation) (Northern Ireland) Order 1977 came into operation.

Prisoners (Parole)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many members of the security forces convicted of offences in Northern Ireland and sentenced to custodial sentences have been allowed to return to Great Britain on parole for humanitarian reasons in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Scott: There is no parole scheme in Northern Ireland. There are provisions for home leave for certain sentenced inmates, but I regret that information about the grant of leave to former members of the security forces is not readily available.

Prisoners (Transfers)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many members of the security forces convicted of crimes in Northern Ireland and sentenced to custodial sentences have been returned to Great Britain to serve the whole or part of their sentence in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Scott: The information is as follows:

Sons of William Annual Band Parade

Rev. William McCrea asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will call for a report from the Chief Constable as to how many police officers were on duty for the Sons of William annual band parade between the hours of 7 o'clock and 10 o'clock in Cookstown, County Tyrone, Northern Ireland in 1984 and 1985, respectively;

(2) what were the costs of policing the Sons of William annual band parade in the years 1984 and 1985, respectively.

Mr. Scott: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Community Activities (Financial Support)

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to ensure that Government financial support for community activities is not used to foster the aims and objectives of paramilitary interests.

Mr. Hurd: It is the Government's policy to encourage voluntary and community-based activity which has the genuine aim of improving social, environmental or economic conditions in areas of need, and various grant-aid schemes exist for such purposes. However, I am satisfied, from information available to me, that there are cases in which some community groups, or persons prominent in the direction or management of some community groups, have sufficiently close links with paramilitary organisations to give rise to a grave risk that to give support to those groups would have the effect of improving the standing and furthering the aims of a paramilitary organisation, whether directly or indirectly. I do not consider that any such use of Government funds would be in the public interest, and in any particular case in which I am satisfied that these conditions prevail no grant will be paid.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Independent Radio (Northern Ireland)

Mr. Bellingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about independent local radio in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Brittan: An independent local radio station in Belfast began broadcasting in 1976. In 1979, following the second report of the Home Office local radio working party, my noble Friend the Viscount Whitelaw approved the location of a station in Londonderry, and the Independent Broadcasting Authority subsequently offered the Londonderry franchise to a local consortium. In the event, the consortium was unable to complete the preparatory arrangements within a reasonable time scale, and in 1984 the IBA felt compelled to withdraw the offer.

As outlined in the reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, South-West (Mr. Page), on 28 March, at columns 284-85, the funds available to the IBA for extension of the local radio network are now severely constrained. Moreover, in the light of broadcasting and other developments in recent years, the IBA takes the view that few of the areas which were approved for independent local radio purposes but which remain unserved, such as Londonderry, would at present attract an advertising income sufficient, on their own, to sustain an independent local radio station. As a means of bringing a service to Londonderry, therefore, the IBA has sought my approval to an initiative along the lines of that which I approved for four locations in Great Britain in my statement on 28 March. In Northern Ireland, this would involve extending the Belfast franchise area to include Londonderry, and advertising the extended areas as and when the contract for the existing Belfast franchise is due to expire. In addition, the contractor for the new area would be expected to provide the means, by way of advance payment, to enable the IBA to install transmitting equipment and allied facilities for the extended area. The extended area may include Omagh and Enniskillen, depending upon the potential contractor's assessment of the relationship between forward funding costs and population coverage.

I have carefully considered the IBA's request. I recognise that an ILR franchise extending to the greater part of Northern Ireland may not be thought to be wholly consistent with the concept of local radio. Nevertheless, I accept that, as with the corresponding initiative in four areas in Great Britain, mentioned in my earlier statement, localities at present unserved are likely to remain so for the foreseeable future unless a new approach is adopted. I have also taken note that, as in Great Britain, the IBA will seek to acquire relevant programming for and representation from the new area. I have therefore decided to approve the IBA's proposals in principle, subject to the outcome of local consultation in accordance with section 19(3) of the Broadcasting Act 1981. The IBA and I attach particular importance to this consultation process. If, in the light of it, the proposed extension of the existing franchise area is generally unacceptable locally, the revised arrangements will not take place, and the IBA will seek to re-let the existing franchise area only. If, however, the proposals are found to be generally acceptable, the extension of the franchise area will not preclude the setting up of separate ILR stations in Northern Ireland in the future if circumstances permit.

Young Persons (Unruliness Certificates)

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of the under 17-year-old population were committed under unruliness certificates in West Yorkshire in each of the last five years; and what was the proportion nationally in each such year.

Mr. Mellor: The readily available information is given in the following table. It is not possible to identify separately those committed under a certificate of unruliness.

Population aged 14 and under 17 of Prison Department establishments in West Yorkshire and England and Wales on 30 June: the proportion on remand

*Percentage of total

	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984
West Yorkshire†

Convicted unsentenced	21	21	23	6	3
England and Wales
Untried‡	5	5	4	4	7
Convicted unsentenced	10	11	11	3	2

* All prisoners aged under 17 excluding non-criminal prisoners.

† Leeds prison, New Hall detention centre, Rudgate prison, Thorp Arch remand centre, Wakefield prison and Wetherby borstal/youth custody centre; juveniles on remand are held in Leeds prison and Thorp Arch remand centre.

† Juveniles in this category may only be remanded under the unruliness certification procedure. Boys aged 14 could only be so remanded up to 31 March 1981.

Most juveniles in this category are thought to have been committed to the Crown court for sentence under section 37 of the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980, which does not require the issue of a certificate of unruliness, but it is not possible to identify how many others may have been remanded under the unruliness certification procedure.

Bail Hostels

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state the location of bail hostels in England and Wales, the number of beds available in each hostel and the percentage occupancy of each hostel during 1984.

Mr. Mellor: The location, number of available places and percentage occupancy during 1984 for the 17 approved bail hostels in England and Wales are as follows:

Name	Location	Approved places on 31 December 1984	Percentage occupancy during 1984
Basildon	Basildon, Essex	15	77
Blackburn	Blackburn, Lancashire	12	77
Clark's House	Oxford	12	74
Corfton Road	Ealing, London	18	73
Curtis House	Liverpool	8	77
Dudley Centre	Newton Abbot, Devon	16	64
Howard House	Leicester	17	89
Howden House	Leeds, West Yorkshire	15	80
Kelley House	London, NW1	12	61
Kew	Kew, London	14	72
Lichfield Road	Stafford	12	83
Marshall House	Wolverhampton, West Midlands	15	61
South Bank	Middlesbrough, Cleveland	20	73
St. Mungo's	Battersea, London	9	89
Tulse Hill	Tulse Hill, London	24	57
Welford	Aston, Birmingham	19	81
Westmorland Road	Newcastle-upon-Tyne	9	71

In addition, there are 16 combined probation and bail hostels with 309 places, of which about half are usually taken by persons on bail, and 65 probation hostels with 1,199 places, which, although mainly intended for persons on probation, will also take a few persons on bail if they have vacancies. On 31 May 1985 there were 528 persons remanded on bail to approved hostels of all types.

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average cost per day of a bail bed in a bail hostel and the average cost per day of a prison remand place.

Mr. Mellor: The average cost of an occupied place in approved bail, probation-bail and probation hostels, less payments received from residents, but before deduction of the local authority flat-rate contribution, was £131 a week in the financial year 1983-84. No separate figure is available for the cost of a bail place in a bail hostel, but it is not likely to vary much from this.

The costs of holding different types of prisoner in penal establishments are not available. During 1983-84, the latest year for which information is available, the average weekly cost of keeping a person in a local prison or remand centre was £216.

Drink-related Offences

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will assess the relationship between drink-related offences and the number of public houses in a particular locality.

Mr. Mellor: We have no plans to do so. It is doubtful whether an assessment of the relationship between the number of drink-related offences and the availability of alcohol in particular localities would be useful if the investigation was limited to the number of public houses and took no account of the total number of licensed premises.

Prisons (Security)

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if is satisfied that proposed economies in top security prisons will not result in less prisoner security.

Mr. Mellor: The measures we are taking are intended to make the most effective use of resources. The present levels of security will be maintained.

Shackleton Report

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he intends to implement the recommendation made by the Shackleton report that public assistance should be given to the members of families of persons excluded under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Acts to the Republic of Ireland or Northern Ireland.

Mr. Brittan: No. My noble Friend the Viscount Whitelaw, the then Home Secretary, gave careful consideration to this in 1980 and concluded that such a scheme could not be justified.

Prisoners

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners giving as their domicile (a) the Republic of Ireland or (b) Northern Ireland have been permitted to return home to Northern Ireland or the Republic of Ireland on parole for humanitarian reasons in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Mellor: This information is not available.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners in British prisons give as their place of domicile (a) the Republic of Ireland and (b) Northern Ireland; and how many of those prisoners in each category were serving sentences for terrorist-type offences.

Mr. Mellor: The information which is readily available relates to prisoners' place of birth and to terrorist-type prisoners held in category A. At 31 March 1985 there were in England and Wales 702 prisoners who gave as their place of birth the Republic of Ireland and 346 who gave Northern Ireland. Of those, 14 born in the Republic of Ireland and 30 born in Northern Ireland had been convicted of terrorist type offences and were held in category A.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, in the light of improved security co-operation between the Republic of Ireland and Great Britain, he will review his policy on the repatriation to the Republic of Ireland for completion of their sentences of prisoners giving as their domicile the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend has no present plans to do so.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners in British prisons who give as their domicile Northern Ireland have been returned to Northern Ireland to serve the whole or part of their sentences in each year since 1969; and how many of these prisoners were serving sentences for terrorist-type offences.

Mr. Mellor: The following table gives the number of permanent transfers of prisoners to Northern Ireland from both England and Wales and Scotland since 1974. Reliable information is not available prior to 1974. In addition, there has been a number of prisoners who were transferred temporarily to Northern Ireland for court appearances who subsequently remained there. Domicile in Northern Ireland is normally required before transfer is agreed.

Charities

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to amend the Charities Act 1960 so as to make it a condition of charitable status that, in their employment policies and practices, charities follow a policy of strict non-discrimination on religious grounds.

Mr. Mellor: The charitable status of an organisation depends on whether its objects are charitable in law. It seems right that it should remain so and we therefore see no reason at present for singling out charities in this way.

Firearms Act 1968

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the names of those responsible bodies and organisations which, to date, have made formal written submissions containing an objection, a legal submission that the proposed condition is ultra vires or alternatives in the interests of public safety, to the territorial recommendations included in his recent working party report into the administration of the Firearms Act 1968.

Mr. Giles Shaw: As I stated in my reply to the hon. Member's question on 5 June, at columns 159-60, we have not yet begun our formal review of the operation of the working party's recommended territorial condition. The British Deer Society and the Shooting Sportsperson's Liaison Committee, however, have already submitted comments in anticipation of the review and I am aware that the latter organisation's submission includes a legal opinion.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, with regard to the administration of the Firearms Act 1968 and his recent working party's report, if he will make a statement to clarify what is defined as (a) an open certificate, (b) a territorially unrestricted certificate and (c) a territorially restricted certificate in that report.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Paragraph 16 of the report of the working party on the administration of the Firearms Act 1968 refers to "open" certificates as "ones containing no territorial condition". The term "territorially unrestricted certificate", which is not used in the report, suggests a certificate which does not contain a condition restricting the areas of land over which the firearm may be used, while the term "territorially restricted" suggests a certificate which does.

Shotguns

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department for each of the last 10 years, what was the number of shotguns involved in crime that, (a) had no serial number on them, (b) had no serial number or maker's name on them and (c) were of British or imported origin, respectively.

Mr. Mellor: The available information on the use of shotguns in crime is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales" (table 3.2 of the volume for 1983, Cmnd. 9349). Information for 1984 is not yet available. Details of individual weapons are not collected centrally.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will provide figures showing the number of crimes involving theft or violence and under 21-year-olds in each of the last five years for which figures are available;

(2) if he will provide figures showing the number of crimes other than of theft and violence involving under 21-year-olds for each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Mellor: Information on the age of offenders is known only for those offenders apprehended. The available information is for offenders found guilty or cautioned and is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales" (table 5.17 of the volume for 1983, Cmnd. 9349, and in the corresponding table in the volumes for earlier years).

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Local Authorities (Expenditure)

63. Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what changes he anticipates in the proportion of public expenditure by local authorities spent on education during the next five years.

Mr. Dunn: The proportion of the total relevant current expenditure of local authorities allocated to education in the Government's plans (as set out in Cmnd. 9428) is 49·5 per cent. in 1985-86 and just below 49 per cent. in 1986-87 and 1987-88. Allocations to services for the latter two years are provisional and remain subject to review. Decisions have yet to be taken on the overall level and allocation to services of local authority expenditure after 1987-88.

Advanced Education

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will estimate the cost of increasing, per student, funding in public sector advanced education to the same level as that in universities.

Mr. Brooke: Differences in the financial mechanisms, circumstances and types of work done in the two sectors make comparisons of their funding levels difficult. Calculations based on a paper recently published by the Department ("Higher Education: Funding Comparisons Across Sectors") suggest that, on the Government's Cmnd. 9428 expenditure plans, recurrent public funding per arts-equivalent student in Great Britain universities in 1985-86 will be between 10 and 27 per cent. more than in public sector higher education in England, depending on the assumption made about the proportion of expenditure attributable in the universities to research as opposed to teaching. On this basis it would cost between £90 million and £240 million per year to increase public sector funding in England to the same level as that in universities.

Thomas More School, Derby

Mrs. Currie asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has taken a decision on the statutory closure notices on St. Thomas More school, Derby; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has today informed the Nottinghamshire LEA and the Nottinghamshire Roman Catholic Diocesan Schools Commission that he has approved their proposals for these schools.

Horticulture (Students)

Mr. John Wells asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing which counties have horticultural colleges or substantial horticultural sections in agricultural colleges; how many students have attended each college in each of the most recent five years for which figures are available; and what was the length and nature of the courses offered, together with such information about costs as is readily available.

Sir Keith Joseph: In November 1983, the latest date for which information is available, courses leading to recognised qualifications in horticulture were provided by 93 further education establishments in England. The following information is readily available for these courses.

For those colleges with 50 or more enrolments in any year the numbers of students participting in the years 1979 to 1983 are in the table. The colleges are shown under their LEA.

Over 80 per cent. of all student enrolments were for courses of the City and Guilds and regional examining boards, other courses included those for OND, HND, national diplomas and certificates in horticulture, college diplomas and the general examination of the Royal Horticultural Society.

It is estimated that 50 per cent. of all student enrolments were for courses of one year's duration. A further 31 per cent. were on the first year of courses lasting two years or more. No information is available about the financial arrangements for specific courses.

Examination Results

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, pursuant to the answer of 15 March, Official Report, columns 304-306, regarding the order of achievement in examination results of each local education authority in England, he will give the equivalent figures for each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The information readily available is shown in the table.

* The figures include estimates of the percentage of those in the 16-18 age group who left school without attempting A-levels but achieved at least 1 A-level pass at tertiary college.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table showing, for every third year from 1962 (a) the percentage of all school leavers leaving (i) comprehensive schools and (ii) independent schools, (b) the percentage of all school leavers with (1) five or more O-levels or equivalent and (2) two or more A-levels and (c) the percentage of all school leavers from maintained schools in England and Wales with (3) five or more O-levels or equivalent and (4) two or more A-levels.

Mr. Dunn: The available information is as follows:

Student Grants

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will estimate the additional cost of awarding all students in higher education a full maintenance grant in each of the categories (a) 18 years plus, (b) 19 years plus, (c) 20 years plus and (d) 21 years plus in 1984-85 and in 1985-86.

Sir Keith Joseph [pursuant to his reply, 17 June 1985, c. 6]: The following are the estimated costs for England and Wales. They are necessarily based on a number of assumptions and thus provide an order of magnitude of the potential costs involved, rather than any precise estimation.

£ million

Cost and Age
Age of Student	18+	19+	20+	21+
Cost in 1984-85	217	181	120	65
Cost in 1985-86	252	210	139	68

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what would be the cost in 1985-86 of restoring mandatory student grants to the real value of the 1978-79 award.

Sir Keith Joseph [pursuant to his reply, 17 June 1985, c. 6]: It is estimated to be about £110 million.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the average level of mandatory student grant paid to mature students, single mature students, married mature students, and married mature students with children; and how many mature students there are in each category.

Sir Keith Joseph [pursuant to his reply, 17 June 1985, c. 6]: This information is not available. In 1983-84, however, 6,500 students received the dependents allowance; 1,400 students received the additional allowance; and 12,400 students received the older students allowance. The total value of these extra allowances amounted to £15·1 million. The figures relate to mandatory award holders only.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Education and Science what would be the cost of restoring all student grants to their October 1978 value.

Sir Keith Joseph [pursuant to his reply, 17 June 1985, c. 6]: The cost of restoring the 1985-86 level of grant for full-value mandatory and discretionary awards to the 1978-79 value would be £122 million.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL FOR SCOTLAND

Pollution (Offences)

Dr. Godman asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland how many persons and organisations were proceeded against in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland for offences relating to pollution of rivers in each of the past five years; how many of those concerned were farmers; and what was the average penalty imposed by the courts for offences of this kind in the past two years.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: Statistics separately recording such offences are not kept.

TRANSPORT

Okehampton Bypass

Mr. Penhaligon asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations have been received from the Okehampton town council, West Devon district council, Cornwall county council and Devon county council regarding the Okehampton bypass.

Mrs. Chalker: All these authorities have written or made representations to us supporting the Department's proposed route for the bypass and/or deploring the report of the joint committee against it.

Mr. Penhaligon asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will indicate the number of acres of the Dartmoor national park to the north of the proposed Okehampton bypass and the number to the south.

Mrs. Chalker: Dartmoor national park is some 233,600 acres in all. The Department's proposed route would take about 140 acres on the very northern edge of the national park; its alignment would leave undisturbed about 233,000 acres, or over 99 per cent., to the south of the route and some 460 acres to the north.

Mr. Penhaligon asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will indicate the length of the public inquiry that took place into the Okehampton bypass and its cost to public funds.

Mrs. Chalker: The public inquiry started on 1 May 1979 and finished on 4 February 1980. The total number of sitting days was 96. The cost of providing a hall, furniture and equipment and the expenses of the inspector was about £70,000. This excludes the Department's costs and the costs of other parties at the inquiry.

MV Bridgeness

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will initiate a public inquiry into the MV Bridgeness running aground on Hats and Barrels reef off south west Wales on 16 June.

Mr. David Mitchell: A surveyor was appointed on 17 June to inquire into all the circumstances of this grounding: on completion of his investigations, his report will be studied within my Department and a decision will be taken on further action.

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Transport if the Nature Conservancy Council was consulted over the spillage of oil from the MV Bridgeness when it ran aground on 16 June.

Mr. David Mitchell: Officials of my Department consulted fully with Nature Conservancy Council officials throughout the incident. An official of the council flew in the surveillance aircraft at the invitation of the Department.

EC (Shipping Policy)

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Transport what progress was made in respect of shipping matters at the European Community Transport Council on 24 June.

Mr. Ridley: The Council debated a communication and proposals from the Commission on a maritime transport policy. I stressed the importance which this Government attach to the rapid liberalisation of shipping services to, from, between and within member states. I reiterated our view that the Community cannot successfully tackle external shipping problems unless it has put its own house in order. The Council accepted this argument and agreed that priority should be given to the adoption of four draft regulations, with a view to arriving at first conclusions by the end of this year. These regulations would liberalise the internal shipping market and arm the Community with powers to deal with protectionism and unfair competition originating in third countries. This Council marks the first step towards a common shipping policy and should be welcomed, as such, by all United Kingdom shipping interests.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Animal Welfare

Mr. Body asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to amend the existing regulations governing farm animal welfare in the light of the European Convention for the protection of animals kept for farming purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: I have no plans to amend existing regulations. We are implementing the convention through the welfare provisions of the Agriculture (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1968, its subordinate legislation and the codes of recommendations for the welfare of livestock.

Productivity

Mr. Maclean asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has as to the increase in agricultural productivity in each of the EEC countries over the last 10 years.

Mrs. Fenner: A range of information about different aspects of productivity growth in agriculture in the member states of the Community is published by the EC Commission. Information about changes in yield per hectare and per unit of livestock of the main commodities is contained in the "markets" section of the Commission report, "The Agricultural Situation in the Community", copies of which are in the Library of the House; the same publication — page 209, 1984 report — also provides a measure of the growth of total output per unit of labour and per hectare for most member states.

Nuclear Attack

Ms. Richardson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make copies available in the Library of the advice to farmers prepared by his Department for use in the event of a nuclear attack.

Mrs. Fenner: Copies of the booklet "Civil Defence and the Farmer" were placed in the Library on 7 June, the day of publication.

Research

Mr. Dalyell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how long elapsed between his announcement in January of cuts in Government funding of agricultural and food research in 1986 and the initiation of discussions with the industry on ways and means of making good those cuts; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: Following the announcement on 22 January, Agriculture Ministers sought the advice of the Priorities Board on the most appropriate arrangements for securing the greater involvement of the industry in the future funding of research and in determining the programme of work which is undertaken. In the light of the board's advice, there were preliminary contacts with representatives of the industry during April and May; detailed sectoral consultations began in June.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to confirm the areas of his Department's research to be cut; and how long he intends to provide for discussions between the Agriculture and Food Reseach Council and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food over how the finally agreed cuts are to be managed, including the issue of redundancy notices.

Mrs. Fenner: I will be taking decisions on the future allocation of resources for research and development when I have the advice of the Priorities Board. There is already close contact between my Department and the Agricultural and Food Research Council on the management of the commissioned research programme. The discussions on the revised programme will form part of those exchanges. The management of the process of change within the AFRC is a matter for the council.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make it his policy not to implement planned reductions in expenditure on agricultural research and development until the industry has raised the necessary funds to safeguard such aspects of this work as it wishes to continue; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: In order to allow time for consultations on the scope for industry funding no changes have been made in the level of publicly funded research and development in the current year. Those consultations are now under way and I would not wish to prejudge their outcome.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the priorities board first met to discuss reductions in Government funding of agricultural and food research; how many meetings of the board have been held; and on what previous occasions a similar independent review of all agricultural and food research work took place.

Mrs. Fenner: The Priorities Board was first asked to advise on the application of reductions to Government funding of agricultural and food research in January this year and has since held four further meetings. It has met on a total of 10 occasions since its establishment in 1984, and will meet again on 28 June.

The last occasion on which an independent review of inter-sector priorities was undertaken was in the course of work carried out by the Joint Consultative Organisation for research and development in agriculture and food early in 1984.

EC (Structures Regulation)

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when his Department received written submissions from the following organisations in response to the consultation on the implementation of the European Commission's new agricultural structures regulation (a) the Council for the Preservation of Rural England, (b) the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds, (c) the Countryside Commission and (d) the Nature Conservancy Council.

Mrs. Fenner: A joint submission from the Council for the Protection of Rural England and the Council for National Parks was received on 29 May; the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds comments were received on 31 May; the Countryside Commission's on 29 May and the Nature Conservancy Council's on 28 May. The closing date for submission of comments was 24 May.

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) when he approved the text of the draft statutory instrument for submission to the European Commission to bring into effect in the United Kingdom the agricultural structures regulation;

(2) on what date his Department sent the European Commission details of the proposed implementation in the United Kingdom, including the draft statutory instrument, of the European Commission's new agricultural structures regulation.

Mrs. Fenner: No draft statutory instruments have been formally sent to the European Commission, but my officials have held informal discussions with it. In addition, on 29 April, it was sent a copy of the Government's consultation paper on the implementation of the agricultural structures regulation. Copies of the statutory instruments will be formally sent to the Commission when they are laid before Parliament.

Dairy Quotas

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest estimate of the savings to the United Kingdom of the imposition of dairy quotas; and what are the offsetting administrative costs arising from the operation of dairy quotas together with its subsidiary schemes such as the outgoers scheme.

Mr. MacGregor: Any estimate of the savings resulting from the imposition of milk quotas is necessarily of a hypothetical nature given that the Community could not have afforded to support a continuing growth of milk production for which there was no market. At the time of the negotiation of the milk quotas, the Commission estimated that the eventual cost to the Community budget of disposing of each tonne of surplus milk was £170 and forecast that in 1985 Community milk deliveries would reach 108 million tonnes if no action were taken to stem the steady increase in production. If deliveries this year are within the 1985-86 wholesale quota of 98·6 million tonnes and it is assumed they would otherwise have been at the level previously forecast by the Commission, expenditure of about £1,600 million will be avoided on the basis of the Commission's estimated disposal cost. Of this, the United Kingdom contribution would be about £350 million before the operation of the Fontainebleau mechanism.

The cost to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food of administering milk quotas in 1984-85 is estimated at £3·5 million. In addition, a sum of £50 million is being made available to finance the costs of the United Kingdom outgoers scheme; this is being paid to producers in five annual instalments.

DDT

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how much DDT has been exported from the United Kingdom in each of the last five years; and how much is stockpiled in the United Kingdom;

(2) if he has any estimate of the amounts of DDT held (a) by retailers and (b) on farms.

Mrs. Fenner: My Department does not monitor stocks of pesticides held by manufacturers, retailers or on farms. Before clearance under the pesticides safety precaution scheme for the remaining agricultural uses of DDT was withdrawn on 1 October 1984, the co-operation of manufacturing companies and distributors was sought to prevent stockpiling of the chemical prior to withdrawal.

Exports of DDT over the last five years were as follows:

Year	Quantity kgs	Value £000s
1980	1,840	3,000
1981	500	1,000
1982	44,509	22,000
1983	117,275	64,000
*1984	125,503	69,000

* (provisional)
Tariff Heading 2902 9550 from SITC (R2) item 511.39 in the United Kingdom Overseas Trade Statistics

EEC (Fish Landings)

Dr. Godman asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any information about the weight and value of white fish and shellfish landings in each of the European Economic Community maritime states over the past five years.

Mr. MacGregor: Some information on the weight and value of landings in EC member states is available in international publications, in particular the "OECD Review of Fisheries," but I am afraid that because of various differences in the national information provided it would not be possible to extract information on the total landings of white fish and shellfish over the past five years which is directly comparable between the different member states.

Common Fisheries Policy

Dr. Godman asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the percentage rise in expenditure on the common fisheries policy each year since 1979; what increase is proposed for the next two years; and what is the estimated proportion of the expenditure for 1985 and 1986 that will finance the fisheries inspectorate.

Mr. MacGregor: The annual percentage change in Community expenditure under the common fisheries policy since 1979 has been as follows:

	Percentage change
1979	+20·2
1980	−2·6
1981	+14·5
1982	+10·8
1983	+4·0
*1984	−4·0

* (provisional)

The 1985 budget contains 111·8 Mecu for the CFP. This is a 103 per cent. increase on the provisional outturn figure for 1984, but it is not known how much of the available appropriations will actually be used. I regret that information cannot be given for 1986 as the preliminary draft budget has not yet been published.

The cost of the Fisheries Inspectorate is treated as part of the Commission's overall staff costs and is not separately identified in the budget.

EMPLOYMENT

Cost of Living Index

61. Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he is satisfied with the current composition of the cost of living index.

Mr. Alan Clark: Yes, I am satisfied with the composition of the retail prices index but, following established practice, I have reconvened the retail prices index advisory committee to look at certain matters relating to the construction of the index. The committee will make such recommendations as it sees fit.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he is making of the likely take-up of unemployment benefit using both automated credit transfer and four weekly payment in arrears; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The evidence presented in a recent study, commissioned specifically for the purpose by my Department, indicated that a significant number of unemployed people would consider favourably the opportunity to have their benefits paid directly into a suitable short-notice bank account. The study also showed that any form of four-weekly or calendar monthly payment would be less favoured. My officials are now carrying out development work on the practicability of automated credit transfer.

High Technology Industries

Mr. Harvey asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many new jobs have been created in high technology industries since 1977.

Mr. Alan Clark: Information about job gains and job losses is not available from the Department's statistics, but an indication of the net changes can be seen by comparing levels of employees in employment at different dates.

Between June 1977 and March 1985 the number of employees in employment in Great Britain in high technology industries, as defined below, increased by an estimated 8,000. The Department's employment estimates are analysed according to the 1980 standard industrial classification (SIC). There is no standard definition of high technology industries; the following industries have been included in arriving at the estimate given.

Group 330—
Manufacture of office machinery and data processing equipment.
Activity Heading 3441—
Telegraph and telephone apparatus and equipment.
Activity Heading 3442—
Electrical instruments and control systems.
Activity Heading 3443—
Radio and electronic capital goods.

Mr. Harvey asked the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has as to the average wage in high technology industries; and how this figure compares with average earnings in traditional manufacturing and service industries.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Estimates of the average weekly earnings of full-time adult employees in each major industry in April 1984 are published in table X2 of part B of the "New Earnings Survey 1984". A copy is in the Library. Separate details are given for the main industries affected by high-technology, such as telecommunication equipment, electrical measuring equipment and electronic capital goods and components, and aerospace equipment manufacturing and repairing, together with other industries and services.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Harvey asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many jobs have been lost in manufacturing industry since 1977; and what has been the net change in service sector jobs since 1977.

Mr. Alan Clark: Information about job gains and job losses is not available from the Department's statistics, but an indication of the net changes can be seen by comparing levels of employees in employment at different dates.

Between June 1977 and April 1985 the number of employees in employment in manufacturing industries in Great Britain fell by an estimated 1,826,000. Between June 1977 and December 1984, the latest date for which information is available, the number of employees in employment in service industries in Great Britain increased by an estimated 830,000.

Mr. Harvey asked the Secretary of State for Employment wht is his estimate of the number of (a) 21, (b) 22 and (c) 23-year-olds who have never had a job.

Mr. Alan Clark: Results of the 1984 labour force survey indicate that in Great Britain in the second quarter of 1984 there were 103,000 people aged 21 who had never had a job, of whom 21,000 were seeking work; 71,000 aged 22 who had never had a job, including 17,000 seeking work; and 41,000 aged 23 who had never had a job, including 10,000 seeking work.

Mr. Harvey asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the number of unemployed persons who were formerly engaged in manufacturing industry or construction who are aged (a) 50 years and over and (b) 55 years and over.

Mr. Alan Clark: Results of the 1984 labour force survey indicate that in Great Britain in the second quarter of 1984 there were 138,000 people aged 50 years or more who were without a job and looking for work and who had been employed at some time during the previous three years, with their last job in the manufacturing or construction industries. Of this total, 94,000 were aged 55 or more.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Employment when unemployment data for individual local authority wards will be available in the Library.

Mr. Alan Clark: Information for the latest period is now available in the Library. Figures for each month from June 1983 are being prepared and will become available from the computer base in the Library over the next few weeks.

Job Release Scheme

Mr. Harvey asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have taken advantage of the job release scheme; and what is the net cost per job released under the scheme, allowing for the savings on social security of those coming into the scheme.

Mr. Alan Clark: Since January 1977, when the full-time job release scheme commenced, over 288,500 have joined the scheme. Allowing only for savings on social security payments, the approximate annual net cost per person on the scheme in 1984-85 was £1,650.

Perivale Skillcentre

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many staff are currently employed at Perivale skillcentre; what his future staff projections are; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement on the future of Perivale skillcentre;

(3) how many courses and in what subjects are currently available at the Perivale skillcentre; and what are his projections for future courses, including subjects.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I shall write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Deaf and Mentally Handicapped School Leavers

Mr. St. John-Stevas asked the Secretary of State for Employment what measures are being taken by the Government to seek to ensure that young people with the dual disabilities of deafness and mental handicap are able to enter suitable placements upon leaving school; and what information he has as to the facilities which exist in the Chelmsford area.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Government are concerned that adequate measures are taken to ensure that all young people with disabilities, including those with the dual disabilities of deafness and mental handicap, are able to enter suitable placements upon leaving school. The young people concerned should be identified by the careers service while still at school and given appropriate guidance and help. Further special assistance can be provided by local education authorities through "bridging courses" at local colleges of education, by voluntary agencies or by the Manpower Services Commission through the youth training scheme, employment rehabilitation centres, sheltered employment and other assistance.

There are bridging courses at Chelmsford and Braintree and there should be adequate suitable provision through the youth training scheme and other facilities. I would be very glad to look further into the adequacy of these provisions if there is concern over particular facilities or individual young people.

Clothing Industry (Study)

Mr. Sims asked the Secretary of State for Employment if the recent employment market research unit study on the clothing industry was conducted after receipt of a report on the retail trades by researchers at the department of applied economics, Cambridge.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. The research outline for the employment market research unit study was drawn up during March 1983, work continued intermittently until April 1985—due to resource constraints—and the report was published in May 1985. A first draft of the department of applied economics, Cambridge report was received in November 1983 and the final version was published in May 1985.

Retail Trades (Report)

Mr. Sims asked the Secretary of State for Employment if the findings of a report on the retail trades, commissioned by his Department from the department of applied economics, Cambridge, were suppressed and publication of the report delayed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. An early version of the department of applied economics, Cambridge report was sent to the Select Committee on Employment, the CBI and the TUC in June 1984. Redrafting by the authors in the light of comments meant that the final version of the report was not received until February 1985. It was published in May 1985.

ENERGY

British Gas

57. Mr. Robert C. Brown asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement about the size of the revenues he expects from the sale of British Gas.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: There is no point in speculating now. Revenues can only be estimated nearer to the time of the sale.

Redundant Mineworkers

Mrs. Currie asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list all establishments under the National Coal Board which do not come within the scope of the Redundant Mineworkers' Payments Scheme under Statutory Instrument, 1984, No. 457.

Mr. David Hunt: The scheme applies to persons made redundant from a coal mine or from the employment of a coking plant operator (at a coking plant). The scheme also applies to those made redundant from various prescribed places, as listed in the statutory instrument, but only where activities in that place have been reduced or ended as a result of the closure of or reduction in manpower at a mine or plant. The statutory instrument lists the types of establishment covered by the scheme; it does not name the establishments.

Electricity Boards (Supplies)

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will introduce legislation to remove from electricity boards the sanction of cutting off the electricity supply for the non-payment of debts, where the debt relates to the operations of their retail outlets and not the supply of electricity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: Electricity boards have the power of disconnection under section 21 of the Electric Lighting Act 1882 and section 18 of the Electric Lighting Act 1909. In both cases, the power is confined to disconnection for debts in respect of the supply of electricity, and may not be exercised where there is a bona fide dispute.

Nationalised Industries (Retail Outlets)

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy, when setting financial objectives for the nationalised industries for which he is responsible, to specify that their retail outlets should collectively not make a loss; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: Two of the industries for which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is responsible have retail outlets: the electricity supply industry and the British Gas Corporation.

In respect of electricity, my right hon. Friend announced on 26 July 1984, at column 757, that agreement had been reached with the Electricity Council on a package of measures designed to demonstrate that the industry is trading fairly and profitably in the appliance retailing and contracting activities. These measures include the provision that each area board will aim to achieve at least an average 2 per cent. return on current cost net assets employed in these activities in the period 1984-85 to 1987-88. In aggregate, the boards have a target of an average 5 per cent. return over the period. The latest published accounts show that in aggregate the industry's appliance retailing business made a profit in 1983-84 with a return of 6·9 per cent. on average current cost net assets.

In respect of gas, the Government have agreed a financial target with the British Gas Corporation which relates to its business as a whole; there is no separate target for appliance retailing. However, the corporation's annual report and accounts show separately the results of that element of the business. The latest published accounts are for 1983-84 and show that appliance trading made a profit.

Oil Production

Mr. Blair asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give the figures for United Kingdom oil production from 1982 to 1984, the percentage change in production over that period and the forecast for 1985; and if he will give the same figures and percentage change for any other country producing over 100 million tonnes in 1982.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The information requested is given in the following table:

Production of crude oil, natural gas liquids and other mineral oils by major world producers

Units: million tonnes

Oil Exploration (Warwickshire)

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Energy if, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth of 24 June, he will give the location of those areas in Warwickshire for which oil exploration licences have been granted, the dates on which they were granted and details of any results so far achieved.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The part of Warwickshire covered by petroleum licences is south of an east-west line along OS grid reference SP5000. Current licences comprise two production licences awarded in June 1971 and two exploration licences awarded in May 1982 and March 1983, respectively. Some seismic surveys have been carried out under these licences in the area referred to, but no wells have been drilled.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will name the companies involved in oil exploration in Warwickshire and the dates in which these oil explorations are likely to be concluded.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: Petroleum licences entitle the holders to carry out relevant work throughout the licence term, subject where necessary to permission from the local planning authority.

Companies holding petroleum licences covering part of Warwickshire and the term of the licences are as follows:

Production Licences (46-year term)

The production licensees are Bearcat Exploration (UK) Ltd. (Operator), Consolidated Oil and Gas (UK) Ltd., Teck Resources (UK) Ltd. and Shell UK Ltd. (one group) and Consolidated Oil and Gas (UK) Ltd. (Operator), Teck Resources (UK) Ltd. and Shell UK Ltd. (second group).

Exploration Licences (6-year term)

The exploration licensees are Clyde Petroleum plc (Operator), Charterhouse Petroleum Development Ltd. and Industrial Energy Scotland plc.

South Warwickshire Coalfield

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will estimate the number of jobs in other industries and services which will be created as a result of the proposed development of the south Warwickshire coalfield.

Mr. David Hunt: The National Coal Board recently released to local authorities a consultation document, "The South Warwickshire Prospect," which outlined its proposals for a new mine to exploit the coalfield. The board has estimated that the construction of the mine would provide up to 700 jobs and that, when in production, the mine would employ a work force of about 1,800. Whilst it is difficult to estimate the secondary effects on employment, it is clear that, if approved, the proposed development would directly and indirectly generate demands on other industries and services.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Palestine Liberation Organisation

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received from Her Majesty's ambassador in Tunis about the statement on 14 June by the official spokesman of the Palestine Liberation Organisation, Ahmad Abd Al-Rahman, rejecting the peace plan of Prime Minister Peres; and whether he will instruct Her Majesty's ambassador in Amman to seek clarification from King Hussein as to whether this statement represents official Palestine Liberation Organisation policy.

Mr. Luce: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him on 26 June at columns 412-13.

Foreign Ambassadors

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions the South African ambassador in London has been summoned to his Department since 1 August 1984; and what was the reason on each occasion.

Mr. Rifkind: In the period in question the South African ambassador has been called to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office seven times to discuss matters affecting bilateral relations.

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which foreign ambassadors have been summoned to his Department since 1 August 1984; on what date; and for what reason.

Mr. Renton: Foreign ambassadors are asked to call on many different occasions and for a wide variety of purposes. Our dealings with them are in general confidential and it would not be practicable or appropriate to provide details about them.

Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many states have acceded to the non-proliferation treaty since the last review conference; how many states have withdrawn from the treaty since it came into force; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: Sixteen states have adhered to the non-proliferation treaty (NPT) since the last review conference in 1980, bringing its total membership to 129, or four fifths of the membership of the United Nations. No state has ever exercised its right to withdraw from the treaty. The continued success of the NPT in attracting new parties 15 years after it came into force is proof of the valuable part which the treaty plays in enhancing the security of every country and in promoting the safe use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes by its parties. We shall continue to seek universal adherence to the treaty, concentrating in particular on those non-parties which possess significant nuclear facilities which are not open to international inspection.

Special Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Forth asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the special Foreign Affairs Council held on 25 June.

Mr. Rifkind: A special Foreign Affairs Council was held in Luxembourg on 25 June to discuss the Commission's proposed regulation on integrated Mediterranean programmes. The Council resolved outstanding difficulties and agreed the regulation in accordance with the decisions of the European Council.

SOCIAL SERVICES

AIDS

Mr. Butterfill asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what efforts his Department is making to find an effective test to screen for the virus which causes acquired immune deficiency syndrome; and when he expects such a test to be introduced.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I am pleased to say that a test will be introduced within the next few months to screen all blood given by blood donors for antibodies to the virus which causes AIDS. Arrangements will also be made for sexually transmitted diseases clinics to provide an AIDS test for people who fear they may have been exposed to the disease.

I understand and share the concern to get these tests in use as soon as possible. However, we must have tests which are accurate and can be trusted. A number of test kits are already available and in use abroad, but reports from those countries suggest that the tests are not entirely reliable. We believe that no test should be introduced in the United Kingdom until its reliability has been established. There is no point in introducing a test which often fails to detect antibodies in blood or detects antibodies where there are none. An evaluation programme is being undertaken by the Public Health Laboratory Service and National Blood Transfusion Service experts as a matter of urgency. It is essential to complete this programme if we are to have a sensible policy that really does protect the public. Contrary to reports in today's press, no decisions on choice of test kits have yet been made. We hope that we will be able to introduce a test within four to five months. We are also making arrangements to offer counselling to anyone whose blood is found to be positive.

We expect that the number of blood donors found to have antibodies is likely to be very small. The risk of contracting AIDS from receiving a blood transfusion remains extremely small and screening will reduce this risk still further. There is no risk at all to those giving blood of contracting AIDS.

Social Security Costs

58. Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his latest estimate of the total cost of social security in April 1987 on unchanged policies and with benefit upratings in accordance with current practices.

Mr. Whitney: The latest available estimate is £44 billion and is contained in table 3.12 of volume II of the public expenditure White Paper (Cmnd. 9428-II).

Mr. Harvey asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the average cost to the Exchequer of a single person on social security; what is his estimate of the cost to the Exchequer of an average family on social security; and what was the total cost to the Exchequer of social security and unemployment benefits in the latest financial year for which figures are available.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Social Security Reform

59. Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement regarding the predicted net effect on revenue of the proposals contained in the Green Paper "Reform of Social Security".

Mr. Newton: Precise estimates cannot be made until final decisions are taken. However, it is estimated that the pension proposals could reduce tax revenue by some £300 million by the end of the transitional period.

Unemployment Benefit

60. Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much money was paid out in unemployment benefit in the years 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984, respectively.

Mr. Whitney: The information available is given in the table.

Financial Year	Expenditure £ million
1979-80	652·9
1980-81	1,280·5
1981-82	1,701·5
1982-83	1,499·6
1983-84	1,496·5
1984-85	*1,597·0

* Provisional.

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the residential qualifications he applies to applicants for unemployment benefit.

Mr. Whitney: There are no residential qualifications as such for claimants to unemployment benefit, but the benefit is contributory, so that the claimant must have paid national insurance contributions under the schemes in Great Britain or Northern Ireland, (or into schemes with which we have reciprocal arrangements). The claimant must normally be living in the United Kingdom in order to receive unemployment benefit, though for a claimant who satisfies all the conditions it may be paid for short periods to claimants seeking work in other countries in the European Community.

Board and Lodging Regulations

Mr. Portillo asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends to lay the regulations about board and lodging referred to by the Minister for Social Security in his statement to the House on 25 June.

Mr. Newton: The Supplementary Benefit (Requirements) Amendment Regulations 1985 were laid before the House yesterday.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average amount paid in supplementary benefit single payments to meet the cost of a newborn baby; and what is the maximum amount paid.

Mr. Whitney: The 1983 annual statistical inquiry, which is the latest information available, indicates that the average amount paid by way of single payments for the maternity needs of a newborn or recently adopted child is around £60. There is no prescribed maximum amount which may be paid for maternity needs.

Hospitals (Islington)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the bed occupancy rate for each year since 1978 within the Islington district health authority for: (a) acute, (b) geriatric, (c) psychiatric and (d) maternity patients in each hospital.

Mr. John Patten: The available information is given in the tables. Bed occupancy figures are based on a midnight count and do not therefore reflect the use of beds by patients who do not stay overnight.

International House, Woolwich

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why his Department has not yet classified International House, Woolwich, as a hostel under the supplementary benefit regulations; what representations he has received on this matter; and when he expects to reach a decision.

Mr. Whitney: A question whether or not an establishment should be treated as a hostel for supplementary benefit purposes is intially referred to the adjudication authorities for determination. If their findings are that it falls outside the definition, my right hon. Friend has power to decide. The director of International Students Housing Society has written to the Department representing that International House, Woolwich, should be treated as a hostel. The adjudication authorities' determination that it falls outside the definition of a hostel has only just been received. We are considering now whether the establishment should be designated as a hostel, using my right hon. Friend's powers.

Child Benefit

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his Department's estimate of the annual cost of child benefit at the rate announced by him on 18 June, to come into effect in November 1985.

Mr. Newton: £4·45 billion.

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his Department's estimate of the number of people receiving child benefit; and how many of these are currently paying income tax.

Mr. Newton: It is estimated that about 85 per cent. of the 6·9 million families currently receiving child benefit are liable to income tax.

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his Department's estimate of the revenue raised if child benefit were taxed as income as considered in paragraph 4.35 of vol. 2 of the Green Paper, "Reform of Social Security".

Mr. Newton: The estimated yield from taxing child benefit would be about £1¼ billion in a full year at 1985-86 levels of income, tax allowances and benefit rates. This is on the assumption that receipt of child benefit would be treated as an addition to the taxable income of a couple or a single parent liable to tax. However, this yield would be considerably less if any unused amount of wife's earned income allowance could be set against the benefit.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many and what proportion of staff of what grades and what length of service have left employment at his Department's offices nationally, in London generally and at each of his Department's offices in London each year since 1981.

Mr. Whitney: Information on leavers is not retained by location and length of service and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, details of leavers nationally for all administrative grades within local offices are available to the end of 1983 and are as follows:

	Principal	SEO	HEO	EO/LOI	CO/LOII	CA	Total

No. of Leavers	109	174	367	1,390	3,809	1,920	7,769

Leavers as percentage of staff in post	14	14	9	7	10	14	10

These figures represent all leavers, including retirements, terminations and resignations.

Funeral Expenses

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he estimates that net payments for funeral expenses out of the social fund would exceed present total expenditure out of the national insurance fund on death grant benefits and administration.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Pontypridd (Mr. John) on 18 June, at column 104. Until the number of payments likely to be made for funeral expenses has been assessed, an estimate cannot be made of total expenditure on this element of our social fund proposals. Administrative costs, however, currently account for over 40 per cent. of the total cost of the death grant and such costs will be reduced under the proposed new system of help with funeral expenses.

Drug Addicts

Mr. Sackville asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what treatment facilities are available for persons addicted to cocaine.

Mr. John Patten: Details of specialist facilities available for the treatment of drug misusers, including those addicted to cocaine, are provided in "Drug Misuse Prevalence and Service Provision" published by the Department on 19 June, copies of which have been placed in the Library. In addition, general hospital and community health and family practitioner services are available.

NHS (Outpatients)

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the total number of outpatient attendances in National Health Service hospitals in 1983; and what was the comparable figure for 1978.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In 1983 the total number of outpatient attendances in National Health Service hospitals in England was 36,519,550. The corresponding figure for 1978 was 33,950,339. This represents an increase of 2,569,211, or 7·6 per cent. over the period.

Retirement Age

Mr. Harvey asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the cost of lowering the male retirement age to 64, 63, 62, 61 and 60 years in a full year; and what is his estimate of the average cost in each age category (a) per single retired person and (b) per retired married couple.

Mr. Newton: The latest estimate of the cost of reducing the pension age for men is as follows:

Reduction of pension age to	Cost £ million (1983-84)
64	400
63	900
62	1,400
61	1,900
60	2,600

This estimate revises the figures quoted in the Department's memorandum of evidence to the Social Services Committee's inquiry into age of retirement.

National Insurance

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to change the system of national insurance contributions so that contribtions are paid alike by part-time and full-time workers.

Mr. Whitney: National insurance contributions are already paid alike by those part-time and full-time workers whose earnings reach the lower earnings limit (currently £35·50 per week).

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if his Department is aware of any studies on the system of national insurance contributions, and its effect on full-time and part-time employment.

Mr. Whitney: The following recent studies seeking to forecast the economic effects of the Budget have been concerned in part with the proposals to restructure National Insurance contributions:

(a) London Business School Economic Outlook 1984-88 Vol. 9, No. 6 (March 1985);
(b) University of Liverpool Quarterly Economic Bulletin Vol. 6, No. 1 Budget Supplement (March 1985);
(c) C. Johnson, "NICs make news", Lloyds Bank Economic Bulletin (April 1985);
(d) E. Davis and A. Dilmot "The restructuring of national insurance contributions in the 1985 budget", The Fiscal Studies (May 1985).

In addition, we are aware of the following studies which look, in part, at the system of national insurance contributions:

(a) R. Layard and S. Nickell, "The Causes of British Unemployment", National Institute Economic Review, February 1985;
(b) P. Minford, "Unemployment: Cause and Cure", London, Martin Robertson, 1983;
(c) C. Craig and F. Wilkinson, "Pay and Employment in Four Retail Trades", Department of Employment Research Paper No. 51, 1985;
(d) P. Hart and C. Trinder, "Employment Protection, National Insurance Income Tax and Youth Unemployment", National Institute for Economic and Social Research, Working Paper, 1984;
(e) O. Robinson and J. Wallace, "Part-Time Employment and Sex Discrimination Legislation", Department of Employment Research Paper No. 43.

However, none of these is concerned with the particular effects on full-time and part-time employment.

Great Ormond Street Hospital (Cardiac Block)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the latest estimated cost and completion date of the works to make safe the cardiac block at Great Ormond street hospital for sick children.

Mr. John Patten: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Board and Lodging Regulations

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what reports he has received on the operation of the revised board and lodging regulations for young people with particular reference to those without an accepted home address and those released from prison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: My hon. Friend wrote to me on 24 June enclosing a letter from the Essex probation service about this problem and he will receive a full reply shortly.

The exemptions from time limits on boarder status already cover people who entered the accommodation as part of a programme of rehabilitation or resettlement under guidance from, among others, the probation service. The time limits do not apply to young peole in hostels, including probation hostels.

In addition, we have received a number of letters from other hon. Members and from organisations and individuals asking for consideration to be given to exempting other categories of young people from the time limits on board and lodging payments. In my statement to the House on 25 June I announced that we were introducing regulations to extend the exemption categories to cover young people living with their families in board and lodging accommodation. The regulations, which were laid yesterday, will also allow the exemption categories to be further extended if the need is shown.

Pensions

Mr. John asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide estimates, at 1984-85 prices, of projected expenditure on the state earnings-related pension scheme in 1995 to 1996, 2005 to 2006, 2023 to 2024 and 2033 to 2034 if the proposals in the social security Green Paper are implemented.

Mr. Newton: [Pursuant to his reply, 17 June 1985, c. 49]: Expenditure on an unchanged state earnings-related pension scheme would rise from about £1·6 billion in 1995 to £23 billion in 2033. If changes proposed in the Green Paper are implemented, savings will start to be made after 2002. The cost of the scheme is expected to be reduced by about half by 2023 and by about three-quarters by 2034. More precise figures will not be available until the proposals have been finalised in the light of consultations.

Tooth decay

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what was the percentage proportion of children of different ages with known tooth decay in England and Wales over each of the last five years;

(2) what was the average number of teeth with known tooth decay experienced by children in England and Wales over each of the last five years.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 24 June 1985, c. 333-34]: We can obtain this information only from the 10-yearly children's dental health surveys and the most recent comparative data for England and Wales are as follows:

NATIONAL FINANCE

United States Economy (European Community Action)

8. Mr. Wallace asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he is taking in conjunction with other European Community Governments in anticipation of a recession in the United States of America in 1986.

Mr. Lawson: There is no reason to expect a recession in the United States of America in 1986.

Charities

10. Sir William van Straubenzee asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has received any representations regarding changes in the tax treatment of charities owning premises to which they admit their subscribers free of charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: There have been a number of representations, mainly on behalf of one particular charity.

Economic Policy (Pay Levels)

17. Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the implications for the Government's economic policies of the current level of pay increases.

Mr. Peter Rees: My right hon. Friend gave a statement of our economic policy in his Budget statement. The current level of pay increases will not change our objectives.

Exchange Rate

19. Mr. Straw asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the current level of the exchange rate and its effect on economic prospects.

Mr. Ian Stewart: At close of business in London last night, the sterling effective exchange rate index stood at 80·6. The strength of sterling in recent months has further enhanced the prospects of lower inflation over the next year.

Inflation

20. Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether Her Majesty's Government still expects inflation to fall to 3 per cent. by 1988.

Mr. Ian Stewart: This is still a reasonable assumption.

35. Mr. Evenett asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what he expects the trend in the rate of inflation to be at the end of 1985.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Downwards.

37. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current level of inflation.

46. Mr. Dubs asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest rate of inflation.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Gentlemen to the answer given by my right hon. Friend to the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing).

48. Mr. Wrigglesworth asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the rate of price inflation for the second quarter of 1985.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The retail prices index rose by 6·9 per cent. in the year to April 1985, and 7 per cent. in the year to May. The rise in the year to June is also likely to be about 7 per cent.

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the figures for inflation and M3 since 1979 on a monthly basis.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Monthly figures for retail prices are published in Economic Trends on page 42. Figures for M3 are given in table 11.1 of Financial Statistics.

Value Added Tax

21. Mr. David Atkinson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has received any recent representations in favour of raising the threshold for value added tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: About 20 such representations have been received since the last Budget. Increases in the VAT registration threshold are restricted by article 24 of European Council sixth VAT directive to those which maintain its value in real terms. The increase announced in the Budget was the maximum permissible within this restriction and took full account of inflation since April 1973.

22. Mr. Thurnham asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received about preferential treatment on value added tax debts.

Mr. Ian Stewart: None.

44. Mrs. Currie asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total amount of value added tax currently outstanding.

Mr. Hayhoe: It is estimated that the average amount of value added tax outstanding is £1,200 million.

Exports (Economic Activity)

23. Mr. Yeo asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the contribution of exports to the current level of economic activity.

Mr. Peter Rees: The rise of 8½ per cent. in the volume of exports of goods and services over the year to the first quarter of 1985 has been a major factor in the rise in total output. Strong export performance, higher investment and increased consumer spending have all contributed to a rise in gross domestic product of 3½ per cent. over the same period, allowing for the effects of the coal strike.

Johnson Matthey Bankers

24. Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has now received the Bank of England report into the collapse of the Johnson Matthey Bankers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the statement made by my right hon. Friend on 20 June.

Sterling M3

25. Mr. Sedgemore asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the growth of sterling M3.

28. Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make a statement on the most recent position of sterling M3.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The growth of sterling M3 remains hard to interpret. The financing effects of accelerated investment to take advantage of the higher capital allowances available in 1984-85 can be expected to take a number of months to unwind. M0 remains well on track. There is no evidence that monetary conditions at present are insufficiently tight.

State Earnings-related Pension Scheme

26. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has received any submissions from the Confederation of British Industry regarding the cost to industry over the next five years of the proposals for the phasing out of the state earnings-related pension scheme.

Mr. Peter Rees: No.

Share Ownership

45. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's plans in addition to privatisation to effect wider share ownership.

27. Mr. Tim Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures in addition to privatisation he plans to take to encourage wider share ownership.

Mr. Moore: Providing encouragement for wider share ownership is an important objective of Government policy. Several tax measures have been introduced to promote employee shareholding. Other tax changes, including the abolition of the investment income surcharge and the reduction of stamp duty will promote wider ownership of shares. Clause 43 of the Finance Bill proposes that, for share disposals made after the Bill receives Royal Assent, the period after which shares appropriated to employees under an approved profit sharing scheme may be sold without any income tax liability should be reduced from seven to five years. The scope for further measures will be kept under review.

32. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his recent meeting with the Wider Share Ownership Council.

Mr. Moore: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer spoke to the Wider Share Ownership Council on 11 June, on the occasion of the Maurice Macmillan memorial lecture. In his speech, he recalled Maurice Macmillan's dedication to policies aimed at the creation of wealth and its diffusion among the people at large. He referred to the sharp increase in individual share ownership as a result of the Government's privatisation programme and our measures to promote employee share schemes. He also described the success of our efforts to promote home ownership, with over 60 per cent. of all households in Britain now owning their own homes. He put all these measures in the context of the Government's fundamental belief in the idea of a property-owning democracy.

Manufacturing Output

29. Mr. Eggar asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the level of manufacturing output.

Mr. Peter Rees: Manufacturing output in the latest three months is 10 per cent. above its trough in the first quarter of 1981. The June CBI trends inquiry indicates a continuation of healthy output growth and little upward pressure on prices.

Economic Growth

30. Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he is satisfied with the current rate of growth in the economy.

Mr. Peter Rees: Gross domestic product grew by an underlying 3½ per cent. between the first quarters of 1984 and 1985. All the indications are that we are now entering a fifth year of increased economic activity—the longest period of continuous growth since the 1973 oil crisis.

Capital Projects (Public Sector Spending)

31. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he is satisfied that the public sector is spending sufficient money on capital projects.

Mr. Peter Rees: Each proposal for a capital project is considered on its own merits. Within our overall spending plans, we acknowledge the need to find room for worthwhile capital projects.

Social Security Reform

33. Mr. Foulkes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has made any calculation of the increase in either income tax or national insurance contributions which will result from the proposals contained in the Green Paper on the reform of social security and the impact of any such increases on the tax and price index.

Mr. Moore: The implications for national insurance contributions of phasing out the state earnings related pension scheme are outlined in the Green Paper "Reform of Social Security"—volume 2, chapter 1, paragraphs 1.62-1.64. The Green Paper proposals will reduce rather than increase income tax.

Economic Policy (Unemployment Rates)

34. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the effect of the trend in the rate of unemployment on his economic policies.

Mr. Peter Rees: We will continue with policies to secure a continuing reduction in the rate of inflation and to encourage enterprise, efficiency and flexibility throughout the economy. Sustained progress in these areas is essential for continued growth of output and continued growth of employment.

Government Expenditure

36. Mr. Terry Lewis asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he still expects to reach his targets for total expenditure in 1985-86 as outlined in "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1985-86 to 1987-88".

Mr. Peter Rees: Yes.

Interest Rates

38. Mr. Latham asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make a statement on the current level of interest rates.

40. Mr. Ray Powell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the level of interest rates.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Short-term interest rates remain high but have fallen by around 1½ per cent. from the levels reached in January. Short-term rates will be held at the level needed to achieve monetary conditions that will continue to bring inflation down.

Tax Yields (Petrol and Diesel)

39. Mr. Nicholls asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the effect on estimated tax yields for 1984-85 of fluctuations in the retail price of petrol and diesel.

Mr. Hayhoe: The 1984-85 Budget forecast for revenue from hydrocarbon oil was achieved. Although short-term price fluctuation may affect the yields of value added tax and excise duties, these effects are generally small, and cannot be determined in isolation.

North Sea Oil

41. Mr. Wainwright asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the likely shortfall in 1985-86 of tax revenues from North sea oil if its current prices prevail during the rest of that year.

Mr. Moore: North sea revenues depend on other factors such as oil production and company expenditure as well as sterling oil prices. The sensitivity of oil revenue forecasts to various changes in the underlying assumptions was described in the Budget day press notice on North sea revenues.

Public Sector Pay

42. Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he is satisfied with the current state of public sector pay policy.

Mr. Peter Rees: We believe that all employers, including Government and others in the public sector, should seek to pay what is needed to recruit, retain and motivate their employees and what can be afforded.

Manufacturing Industry

43. Mr. Fallon asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how he views the prospects for employment in manufacturing industry.

Mr. Peter Rees: Manufacturing employment has been falling almost continuously since the late sixties. Recent CBI survey evidence points to little decline over the next few months and is therefore encouraging.

Public Sector Borrowing Requirement

47. Mr. Portillo asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he now estimates that the public sector borrowing requirement for 1985-86 will turn out at the figures announced in the Budget.

Mr. Peter Rees: There is no reason to alter the Budget forecast.

Domestic Rates

49. Mr. Chapman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of total revenue to public funds comes from domestic rates.

Mr. Peter Rees: In 1985-86 income from domestic rates—net of domestic rate relief grant and net of rate rebates — will be about 4 per cent. of general Government total current and capital receipts.

Oil Revenues

50. Mr. Lofthouse asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has revised his forecasts for Treasury oil revenues in the light of recent movements in the sterling exchange rate and in the oil price.

Mr. Moore: It would be premature at this stage to make any revision to the Budget forecast.

Economic Progress

51. Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received from the Confederation of British Industry about the economy.

Mr. Peter Rees: The results of the latest CBI inquiry are very encouraging and show that the total order book is around the highest level recorded and that there is a continued healthy growth in manufacturing output with little outward pressure on producer prices.

Communion Wine

52. Mr. Gregory asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on the subject of taxation of communion wine.

Mr. Hayhoe: I am unable to trace any representations, but if my hon. Friend is aware of any problem, perhaps he would write to me.

Share Option Schemes

53. Mr. Stern asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many share option schemes, and for approximately how many shareholders, have been approved under section 38 of the Finance Act 1984; and how many such schemes for approximately how many shareholders, are awaiting approval.

Mr. Moore: By mid-June 445 schemes had been approved by the Inland Revenue under section 38 of the Finance Act 1984. A further 909 schemes were awaiting approval, 719 of which had already been fully examined by the Revenue and were the subject of correspondence with the applicant. It will not be possible to determine the number of individuals who were granted share options under these schemes in 1984-85 until later in the year when the Revenue has received and analysed sufficient annual returns from the companies concerned. Figures for 1985-86 will not be available until autumn 1986.

Unemployment (Scotland)

54. Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the effect on the level of the public sector borrowing requirement of the current level of unemployment in Scotlands.

Mr. Peter Rees: The current cost of benefits to the unemployed in Scotland is about £700 million. Since it is not possible to estimate the revenue forgone, the full effect on the public sector borrowing requirement cannot be estimated.

Personal Earnings

55. Mr. Spencer asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the percentage increase in personal earnings over the last 12 months.

Mr. Peter Rees: Average earnings in the whole economy grew at an underlying rate of 7·5 per cent. in the 12 months to April. The underlying rate of growth of earnings in manufacturing was 8·75 per cent.

Value Added Tax (Double Glazing)

56. Mr. Holt asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received about the level of value added tax on double glazing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: About two dozen since 1 January. I can hold out no prospect of any change in the rate of coverage of the tax at this time.

Stamp Duty

Mr. Hind asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will take steps to prevent the avoidance of stamp duty on company takeovers.

Mr. Moore: Yes. The Government are tabling a new clause to the Finance Bill restricting the stamp duty exemption for renounceable letters of allotment and similar instruments. A Ways and Means resolution is also being tabled. Copies of an Inland Revenue press release giving details of the proposal are being placed in the Library.

Banks (Auditors)

Mr. Spencer asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he proposes to introduce legislation to raise the qualifications required by external auditors of annual accounts of banks recognised under the Banking Act 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The "Report of the Committee set up to consider the System of Banking Supervision" (Cmnd. 9550) stressed the need for the auditors of deposit-taking institutions to be properly qualified in terms of training and experience.

In his statement to the House on 20 June my right hon. Friend said that he would give careful consideration to the committee's report and accepted it as a basis for immediate consultation.

Taxation and Benefits (Integration)

Mr. Leigh asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on the integration of taxation and benefits.

Mr. Moore: I have received a number of representations.

Single Transferable Tax Allowance

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if any studies have been made to calculate the potential impact on jobs of a single transferable tax allowance.

Mr. Moore: The move to fully transferable allowances will alleviate the poverty and unemployment traps. There will be further discussion in the forthcoming Green Paper on personal tax reform.

Association of Former Trainees of the European Communities

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether any part of the cost of the EEC subsidy to the Association of Former Trainees of the European Communities to mount a demonstration in Milan on 29 June will fall on the British taxpayer directly or indirectly.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The European Commission provides the Association with an office and secretarial services in one of its buildings in Brussels. There is no other subsidy. The costs of the services provided fall on the Community budget. The association has not indicated that any such demonstrations has been planned.

EC (Own Resources)

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the answer of 16 May, Official Report, columns 191-92, concerning EEC own resources, to what factors he attributes the fact that the United Kingdom's value added tax contribution, as a percentage of gross domestic product, has risen by more than that of any other member state except Luxembourg since 1980.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

"Official Report"

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action has been taken either by way of financial penalty or other disciplinary action against those persons who delayed the production of the Official Report published on 7 June.

Mr. Hayhoe: The delay in production was caused by staff reaction to management taking disciplinary action against one of their colleagues. The man concerned has since resigned. The press is now working normally and matters have been left at that.

Exchange Rate and Oil Price Assumptions

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the assumptions used by Her Majesty's Government for the exchange rate and oil price in their forecast of oil revenues in the Financial Statement and Budget report.

Mr. Peter Rees: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Money Supply

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether M3 is still the principal measure of the money supply used by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The two targeted monetary aggregates for 1985-86, as for 1984-85, are M0 and £M3. As my right hon. Friend the Chancellor made clear in his Budget speech, equal weight is given to each.

Income Tax

Mr. Portillo asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer in how many countries of which he has knowledge the starting rate of national income tax is higher than 30 per cent.

Mr. Moore: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Johnson Matthey Bankers

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) whether the security offered to Johnson Matthey Bankers by the Gomba-related companies was in accordance with normal banking practice; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what was the amount owed to Johnson Matthey Bankers by companies associated with Abdul Shamji and Gomba Holdings, his Jersey-registered master company, when the Bank of England acquired Johnson Matthey Bankers in October 1984;

(3) what steps Johnson Matthey Bankers has taken to secure its loans to Gomba-Stonefield and other Shamji related companies;

(4) whether Johnson Matthey Bankers has lent additional funds to Shamji or Gomba-related companies since 1 October 1984; and if he will make a statement;

(5) by how much Johnson Matthey Bankers assisted Gomba-Stonefield at the end of the week ended 21 June; for what purpose; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: JMB's transactions with individual customers are commercial matters. Its lending decisions are the responsibility of JMB's new management; and are confidential between the bank and its customers. The Government are not involved in such decisions.

Lloyd's Syndicates (Reinsurance)

Mr. Steen asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he hopes to conclude his consideration of the tax position of the reinsurance arrangements of Lloyd's syndicates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Inland Revenue is responsible for handling the tax affairs of Lloyd's syndicates and their underwriting members.

Yen (International Currency)

Mr. Hickmet asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he is taking to persuade the Japanese authorities to allow their currency to become an international currency.

Mr. Ian Stewart: In the interests of the efficient working of the international trading and financial systems, it is important that the world's major industrial economies ensure that their domestic markets—both financial and for goods — are open to their competitors. Large economies such as Japan must allow their currencies to play a part commensurate with their relative importance to world trade, income and wealth. By most criteria the international role of the yen is still relatively undeveloped for an economy of Japan's size. My right hon. Friend pressed on Finance Minister Takeshita the importance to the world economy of further moves in Japan to remove any remaining restrictions on the free movement of capital which are not required for prudential purposes and to make as rapid progress as possible in increasing the range and availability of yen-denominated financial assets. These questions have also been discussed at official level. Although the Japanese Government have recently taken some steps to liberalise both the Euroyen and the domestic yen markets, this process needs to be taken considerably further.

Manufacturing Investment

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the level of net investment in manufacturing over the period 1978 to present.

Mr. Peter Rees: Published figures for net investment in manufacturing do not reflect the growth of lease financing in recent years. They also rest on accounting judgments about asset lives. Gross business investment is at an all time high and that in manufacturing grew by 14 per cent. last year.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Authorities (Rate Limitation)

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will show for each authority selected for rate limitation in 1985-86 (a) its rate limitation expenditure level set in July 1984, (b) its budgeted total expenditure, (consistent with figures in column 28 of "Finance and General Rating Statistics 1985-86") and (c) the percentage difference between the two figures.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: Based on information received from authorities, the information is as follows:

‡ the excess of reported expenditure over the expenditure level in part reflects the allowance made in setting the rate-precept limit where authorities budgeted in 1984-85 to make substantial use of special funds and where it seemed possible that they might have inadequate reserves in 1985-86; and, in the case of Hackney and Haringey, the allowance made for anticipated deficits in 1984-85.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the overall total of expenditure for the authorities selected for rate limitation in 1985-86 at 1985-86 budget stage consistent with figures in column 28 of "Finance and General Rating Statistics 1985-86", compared with the same figures at budget stage for the same authorities in 1984-85; and if he will also publish the comparable figure for English local authorities as a whole.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: Based on available information, latest estimates are as follows:

	"Total" Expenditure 1984-85 Budgets	1985-86 Budgets	Percentage Increase (in cash terms)
	£ million	£ million	per cent.
Authorities selected for rate limitation	*3,233	†3,327	2·9
All England	*21,194	†22,093	4·2

* excluding budgeted contributions by the GLC to London Regional Transport, for consistency with the 1985-86 figures.

† for the two rate-capped authorities for which information is not available, budgeted "total" expenditure has been assumed to be equal to their expenditure levels.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the total grant penalties incurred by the 18 authorities selected for rate limitation in 1985-86 at 1985-86 budget stage, consistent with figures in column 34 of "Finance and General Rating Statistics 1985-86", compared with the comparable penalties for the same authorities in 1984-86.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: Based on available information for 1985-86, total grant penalties incurred by the 18 authorities selected for rate limitation are estimated to amount to £83·9 million. In 1984-85 total grant penalties arising from the budgeted spending of these same authorities amounted to £142·6 million.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a list of those authorities from among the 18 selected for rate limitation in 1985-86 which set a rate or precept at or below the financial maximum approved by Parliament and which also propose to spend, according to figures consistent with those in column 28 of "Finance and General Rating Statistics 1985-86", above the rate limitation expenditure level set for each authority in July 1984.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: Of the 18 authorities selected for rate limitation in 1985-86 which have set a rate, the following are budgeting, on information available, to spend in excess of their expenditure Levels:

Brent
Hackney
Haringey
ILEA
Islington
Lewisham
Merseyside
Sheffield
South Yorkshire

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish for each authority selected for rate limitation in 1985-86 the percentage increase in its expenditure target in 1985-86 compared with its target for 1984-85, showing the average increase for all 18 authorities and the average increase for English local authorities as a whole.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: The information is as follows:

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish for each authority selected for rate limitation in 1985-86 for which figures are now available, the percentage increase or decrease in its 1985-86 budgets, consistent with figures in column 28 of "Finance and General Rating Statistics 1985-86", compared with its original 1984-85 budget, consistent with figures in column 28 of "Finance and General Rating Statistics 1984-85".

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: The available information is as follows:

‖ the percentage increases in expenditure may in part reflect the allowance made in setting the rate-precept limit for these authorities which budgeted in 1984-85 to make substantial use of special funds and where it seemed possible that they might have inadequate reserves in 1985-86, and, in the case of Hackney and Haringey, the allowance made for anticipated deficits in 1984-85.

Housing Defects Act 1984

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out in the Official Report the amount of prospective spend under the Housing Defects Act taken into account when making the housing investment allocations for the current year for each housing authority; and if he will give a breakdown between repairs and repurchase.

Mr. Gow: The need for expenditure on defective prefabricated reinforced concrete dwellings accounts for 3 per cent. of the generalised needs index which is used to make 50 per cent. (40 per cent. in London) of the housing investment programme allocations to individual authorities. Locally assessed factors, including particular problems in dealing with stock are taken into consideration in making the local discretionary element part of the allocation.

Planning Circulars

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will outline the criteria he applies in deciding whether to consult interested organisations on draft circulars on planning and which organisations to consult.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: It is customary to consult the local authority associations and other interested organisations on draft circulars on planning matters, particularly where these introduce new procedures or are likely to make new demands on local authority manpower. The need for prior consultation and the range of interests consulted depends on the circumstances.

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the most recent occasion on which his Department issued a circular on planning policy without previously consulting the relevant local authority associations.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The last occasion on which a planning circular was published without prior consultation was on 22 November 1983, circular 25/83: The Town and Country Planning (Fees for Applications and Deemed Applications) Regulations 1983, which related to the revised scale of fees.

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will indicate the policy areas that will be covered by the proposed circular on planning controls announced on 22 April.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: We have in mind that the circular and associated booklet should deal with planning matters which are of particular relevance to the development proposals of small firms.

Local Government Expenditure

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his Department's current estimates of the total amount by which local government expenditure is expected to exceed in 1985-86 (a) grant-related expenditure assessments and (b) expenditure targets; and if he will supply a breakdown of those figures in each category listed for each individual authority in terms of both total money amount and percentage.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin [pursuant to his reply, 21 June 1985, c. 263]: The estimate of English local authorities' budgeted overspend against targets in 1985-86 should have been £226 million (not £266 million). This revised figure is consistent with the overspend against GRE of £820 million. None of the figures for individual authorities placed in the Library is affected by this change.

SCOTLAND

Milk and Cream

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on current progress regarding the bringing forward of amendments to the Milk (Special Designations) (Scotland) Order 1980 and the Cream (Heat Treatment) (Scotland) Regulations 1983; and if he will indicate which bodies are being consulted and the time scale envisaged for proposed amendments.

Mr. John MacKay: Proposed amendments to the Cream (Heat Treatment) (Scotland) Regulations 1983 were issued by my Department on 26 June 1985. The normal period for consultation of three weeks is proposed. After considering the responses, it is intended to lay the regulations before the summer recess. The organisations consulted are:

The Convention of Scottish Local Authorities.
The Scottish Milk Products Manufacturers' Association.
the Scottish Dairy Trade Federation.
The Scottish Milk Marketing Board.
The Aberdeen and District Milk Marketing Board.
The North of Scotland Milk Marketing Board.
The Royal Environmental Health Institute of Scotland.
The National Farmers' Union of Scotland.
The Association of Scottish Public Analysts.
The Scottish Food and Drugs Co-ordinating Committee.
The British Medical Association (Scottish Branch).
The Council of the Scottish Agricultural Colleges.
The Scottish Consumers' Council.

In addition, copies of the proposed amendments have been sent to two cream producers who have made representations about the proposals.

There are no proposals to amend the Milk (Special Designations) (Scotland) Order 1980 in respect of the raw milk policy.

Nurses and Midwives

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how he expects to fund the costs which will be incurred by the Scottish health boards in meeting the pay awards to nurses and midwives during the financial year 1986-87.

Mr. John Mackay: The cost to the health boards in 1986-87 of meeting the 1985 pay awards for NHS staff will be considered when forward provision for the health programme is reviewed in the current survey of public expenditure.

Surveillance Equipment

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has yet completed the review of the use of surveillance equipment by the police; whether guidelines on this and on the work of special branches have yet been issued; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Younger: The review of the use of surveillance equipment has recently been completed and revised guidelines have been issued to the police in Scotland. Following a separate review, guidelines on special branches also have been issued. I am arranging for copies of both sets of guidelines to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

EUROPEAN COMMUNITY

Council of Ministers

Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community Council of Ministers.

Mr. Rifkind: The usual written forecast was deposited in the House earlier today. At present, four meetings of the Council are scheduled for July.

The Economic and Finance Council is due to meet on 8 July to continue its discussion of implementation of budget discipline in relation to the 1986 budgetary procedures. The Council will also consider the Commission's second quarterly review of the economic situation in the Community.

The Agricultural Council is expected to meet on 15 and 16 July to complete discussions on Commission price proposals in respect of cereals and rapeseed. The Council may also consider veterinary harmonisation (hormones and heat-treated milk).

The Foreign Affairs Council is due to meet on 22 and 23 July to consider a proposal for simplifying frontier controls at ports and airports; the Mediterranean financial protocols; policy on the multi-fibre arrangement; and a negotiating mandate for an EC/Central America co-operation agreement. The Council will probably also have to consider follow up to the Milan European Council.

The Industry Council is expected to meet on 26 July to discuss Commission proposals for a future regime for steel aids and quotas.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Peru

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on current United Kingdom relations with Peru.

Mr. Renton: We enjoy friendly relations with Peru and maintain frequent contact on a wide range of subjects. Dr. Javier Silva Ruete, adviser to the President-Elect, Dr. Alan Garcia, was able to pay a short visit to London as our guest from 11-14 June. I will have the honour to represent the Government at Dr. Garcia's inauguration on 28 July.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Law Commission Liability

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked The Attorney-General when Her Majesty's Government propose to introduce legislation regarding the report of the Law Commission on liability; and what representations the Lord Chancellor has received from the construction industry in this regard.

The Attorney-General: I assume my hon. Friend is referring to the 24th Report of the Law Reform Committee (Cmnd. 9390) which concerns the law of limitation in negligence cases involving latent damage. Legislation based on the Committee's recommendations will be introduced as soon as parliamentary time is available. Following publication of the committee's report, the Lord Chancellor's Department received a number of representations from a broad range of interested groups. Among those in the construction industry from whom comments were received were the Building Employers' Confederation, the Federation of Master Builders, the Royal Institute of British Architects, the Association of Consultant Architects, the Association of Consulting Engineers and the Institution of Civil Engineers.

PRIME MINISTER

Endangered Species

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Prime Minister if, further to her reply to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark), 24 June, Official Report, column 292, she will indicate why the proceedings of the Committee on International Trade in Endangered Species Regulations are confidential.

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom is observing the rules of procedure for this committee which state that the proceedings shall be confidential. This is the normal practice for committees of this nature.

Government Cars

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Prime Minister what is the yearly cost of hiring motor cars for use by Ministers of the Crown and senior civil servants; and if she will estimate the cost of the Government keeping its own fleet of small motor cars for this purpose.

The Prime Minister: The Government car service currently provides chauffeur driven transport to Ministers of the Crown, the Leader of the Opposition, senior civil servants and other authorised users of the service at an annual cost of £3,351,000. To supplement this at periods of peak demand, chauffeur driven cars and taxis are hired at an annual cost of £186,000.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Burnham Committee

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether, as part of the forthcoming review of the Burnham committee arrangements, he will consider the case for an independent secretariat for the teachers' panel and for the adoption of rules and standing orders for the conduct of business by the teachers' panel.

Sir Keith Joseph: I have decided to undertake a review of the composition of the teachers' panel of the Burnham primary and secondary committee under the powers granted to me by the Remuneration of Teachers Act 1965. The Act does not give the holder of my office any powers to determine the Committee's working arrangements. Matters relating to the secretariat and to standing orders are accordingly outside the purview of the review.

Education Maintenance Allowances

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what would be the cost of providing education maintenance allowances for all pupils remaining in schools or colleges for one year after the statutory school leaving age, at the rate of £27 per week, for one week, 38 weeks, 40 weeks, or 52 weeks and similarly for those remaining for two years and for three years, after deducting child benefit and existing education maintenance allowances.

Sir Keith Joseph: The estimated cost of providing educational maintenance allowances for all pupils aged 16-18 remaining in schools and non-advanced further education beyond their 16th birthday is as follows:

£ million

	16	17	18	All
Cost for:
1 week	6	4	1	12
38 weeks	243	160	48	451
40 weeks	256	168	50	474
52 weeks	333	218	65	617

The total sum of £617 million for 52 weeks replaces the answer given to the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish on 17 June at c. 6.

Notes:

1. Figures for pupils and students are as at January 1984.
2. Expenditure figures have been rounded; consequently the figures for each age group do not precisely match the totals in the right hand column.

Teachers (Pay)

Mrs. Sally Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what was the increase in teachers' pay in each of the years from 1974 to 1979 expressed as a percentage; and what was the total increase over the period expressed as a percentage;

(2) what was the increase in teachers' pay in each of the years from 1979 to 1985 expressed as a percentage; and what was the total increase during this period expressed as a percentage.

Sir Keith Joseph: Percentage increases in teachers' salaries for each year from 1979 to 1984 inclusive are given in the table. All settlements have been attributed to 1 April though those for 1974 and 1980 represent a consolidation of separate settlements applicable from two or more dates during those years.

The cumulative value of settlements over the six years up to and including April 1979 amounts to 126·3 per cent. The value of settlements over the subsequent five year period up to April 1984 amounts to 69·9 per cent. I would also refer my right hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) on 7 February at columns 667-668.

Percentage increase in teachers' pay

April	Percentage
1974	*37·0
1975	22·3
1976	8·3
1977	3·8
1978	9·9
1979	9·3
1980	†35·1
1981	7·5
1982	6·0
1983	5·0
1984	5·1

* A negotiated settlement of 8 per cent. from 1 April 1974 plus an additional 27 per cent. recommended by the Houghton Committee taking effect from 24 May and estimated to be worth a further 2 per cent. in the long term.

† A 14·6 per cent. arbitration award plus an additional 17·9 per cent. awarded by the Clegg Commission.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Criminal Injuries (Compensation)

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year since 1973 the amount of compensation payments made under the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1973;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report a table giving the amounts in each year since 1 January 1977, of payments made under the Northen Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978.

Mr. Scott: The information is as follows:—

Financial Year	Amount Paid £
1973-74	34,156
1974-75	27,848
1975-76	122,529
1976-77	133,797
1977-78	108,890
1978-79*	82,845
1979-80	148,571
1980-81	157,073
1981-82	115,375
1982-83	143,619
1983-84	174,240
1984-85†	235,384

Notes:

* Of this amount some £13,000 for April and May 1978 was paid under the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1973. The balance of compensation for 1978/79 and all subsequent payments were made under the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978 which came into operation on 1 June 1978.

† This amount may be subject to a slight variation on completion of the Appropriation Account.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost of the Royal Ulster Constabulary in each calendar year 1983 and 1984 giving separately figures for (a) salary and benefits, (b) transport and communication, (c) new construction, (d) other costs, (e) total gross expenditure and (f) total net expenditure after deduction of receipts.

Mr. Scott: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Security Staff

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the amount of the security staff premium paid by the Government in each of the fiscal years 1982-83 and 1983-84.

Mr. Scott: Payments under the security staff grants scheme came to £1,354,821 in 1982-83, and £1,296,377 in 1983-84.

Droppin Well Bombing (Remands)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will give the length of custodial remand undergone by persons charged in connection with the Droppin Well bombing; and if he will make a statement as to when the trial of such persons may be expected to take place;

(2) how the period of custodial remand undergone by persons charged in connection with the Droppin Well bombing compares with the average period of remand without bail for persons charged with scheduled offences in Northern Ireland; and if he will comment on reasons for any abnormal delay in bringing persons charged in connection with the Droppin Well bombing to trial.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 24 June 1985, c. 322]: Of the five persons currently awaiting trial having been charged with offences arising from the bomb explosion at the Droppin Well, Ballykelly on 6 December 1982, two have been in custody for 83 weeks, one has been in custody for 73 weeks and two have been in custody for 55 weeks.

All five persons were committed for trial on 20 November 1984 and were arraigned on 8 March 1985. The Crown has in principle been ready to proceed with the prosecution since that date. I understand that on 20 June 1985 the defence solicitors notified the Belfast Crown Court of the identities of the senior defence counsel, and that the trial may therefore be expected to take place during the legal term which begins in September 1985. The average period spent in custody between first remand and the first day of trial by those charged with scheduled offences who were in custody at the time their trial started and whose cases were disposed of during 1984, was 47 weeks.

There are a number of reasons why particular cases take longer than normal to bring to trial. In the case of the five persons charged with offences relating to the Droppin Well explosion. The fact that they were arrested at different times had on impact on the progress on police investigations and on subsequent stages leading up to arraignment. I am satisfied that there has been no untoward delay in the handling of this case.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Manufactures

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the estimate of the percentage of world trade in manufactures in 1984; and how this compares with the percentage in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Fletcher: The United Kingdom share of exports of manufactures by the main manufacturing countries is estimate to have been 7·6 per cent. in 1984. The MMCs account for about three quarters of world trade in manufactures.

House of Fraser

Mr. Wrigglesworth asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he sought any evidence from sources other than the Al Fayeds or Kleinwort Benson as to whether the Al Fayeds had adequate cash resources from their own funds to pay for the House of Fraser prior to taking his decision not to refer their bid to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he sought any evidence, other than from Kleinwort Benson and the Al Fayeds upon which to ascertain the true beneficial ownership of the House of Fraser prior to making his decision not to refer the bid by Al Fayed to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: The Secretary of State took his decision not to refer in the light of information about the proposed merger from a number of sources.

Telephone and Radio Apparatus

Mr. Moynihan asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will introduce legislation to prohibit the sale of such cordless telephones and citizens band radio apparatus which it is an offence to use in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Pattie: I hope to introduce orders later this year on cordless telephones and citizens' band radio under Section 7 of the Wireless Telegraphy Act 1967 (as amended by section 77 of the Telecommunications Act) which gives powers to restrict manufacture, sale, hire and importation of specified wireless telegraphy apparatus. The restrictions will apply to all cordless telephones which are not exempt from licence requirements in the United Kingdom. The restrictions will also apply to all citizens' band radio which cannot be licensed for use in the United Kingdom with the exception of angle modulated radios designed to operate in the 26,960 MHz-27,410 MHz band and which meets the technical specifications contained in recommendations T/R 20-02 of the conference of European posts and telecommunications administrations. The exception will be made because the United Kingdom is moving towards harmonisation with the rest of Europe on the specification of CB equipment. However, because of the requirements of existing radio users, the CB service in the 26,960-27,410 MHz band cannot be introduced until 1987 at the earliest so use of this equipment will remain an offence until the band can be cleared of its existing users and made over to the CB service.

Mr. Moynihan asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will seek to give legal force to BS 905: Part 2: 1985 which specifies limits of immunity for radio and television broadcast receivers and associated equipment.

Mr. Pattie: In over 20 per cent. of the complaints made to my Department in which the complaintts believe they are suffering radio interference the problem arises in fact because their own receiving equipment lacks immunity, that is the equipment picks up transmissions from various radio users operating outside the broadcast channels. In order to cut down these reception problems, I hope to introduce later this year regulations under section 12A of the Wireless Telegraphy Act 1949 (as amended by section 78 of the Telecommunications Act 1984) to restrict new contracts for the sale, hire and advertising of broadcast receiving equipment which does not meet BS 905: Part 2: 1985.

Common Law Institute of Intellectual Property

Mr. Moynihan asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he is able to offer financial support to the newly-formed Common Law Institute of Intellectual Property.

Mr. Pattie: As the Green Paper published in December 1983 indicated, the importance of intellectual property for industry and commerce has been insufficiently appreciated in the United Kingdom. I therefore welcome the recent formation of the Common Law Institute of Intellectual property and propose to provide it with a grant aid of £25,000 in the current financial year and up to £50,000 in each of the two succeeding years, subject to matching contributions from industry, to carry out academic research into legal and economic factors relevant to the creation and exploitation of intellectual property rights. I shall monitor its operations, which should make a considerable contribution to the development of the innnovative capacity of the United Kingdom. Parliamentary approval to this new grant in aid provision will be sought in a revised Estimate for the scientific and technological assistance vote. Pending that approval the necessary expenditure will be met by repayable advances from the Contingencies Fund.

Wide Area Paging

Mr. John Browne asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has received the Director General of Oftel's advice on the future of Bands I and III and on wide area paging; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pattie: I have received the Director General's advice and I have also been able to discuss it with him. I understand it will be published today.

I have found the Director General's advice extremely helpful in reaching decisions on these matters. Our discussion enabled us to explore the more complex issues and reach agreement on means of finding solutions.

Before reaching my decisions I received comments from a number of hon. Members, from radio manufacturers and users. In addition, I and my officials have discussed the issues involved with industry and user groups and with individual companies.

In the light of the Director General's advice and given the uncertainty of forecasts of future demand for private mobile radio services and of the nature and speed of technical developments, I have decided against making allocations in the lower and upper sub-bands of band III at this stage and that therefore new band III users should operate in the middle sub-band of band III.

I am aware of the increasing interest in the United States of America in exploiting single side band modulation techniques to improve radio frequency spectrum use, particularly for land mobile radio and aeronautical public correspondence, and I am pleased to note that the United Kingdom has a prominent lead in the development of this technology. It is therefore sensible that encouragement be given to further development of SSB and I shall consider at the appropriate time its introduction in either the upper or lower sub-band of band III, or indeed in other parts of the radio spectrum.

I have decided that the balance of interest of United Kingdom industry and users of private mobile radio lies in the establishment of mobile radio on a nationwide basis. An invitation to apply by the beginning of September for licences to operated such a service will be issued on 1 July and I have asked the Director General to consider these applications and to make recommendations by the end of the year. Copies of the notes of guidance for applicants can be obtained at OFTEL.

For spectrum engineering reasons, including the need to avoid causing interference to neighbouring countries, it is possible that only one licence will be issued on a nationwide basis. Certainly these reasons will preclude the assignment of more than a handful of national frequencies. In the long term, some 200 channels will be made available for nationwide services but initially somewhat less than this number will be released.

Whether one or two systems are licened on a nationwide basis initially, provision will be made to allow a further national private mobile radio network to operate in the lower sub-band of band III as and when demand and the needs of competition call for it.

One of the main reasons prompting this decision is that a demand for private mobile radio on a national roaming basis does appear to exist and could not be met by a collection of local systems; a geographical coverage requirement will be imposed on any successful applicant for a national system licence, but I believe it would be better to decide on that requirement after the applications have been received. The allocation of a substantial section of the available spectrum for private mobile radio in band III on a nationwide basis requires that careful consideration be given to the question of competition. In particular, the case which the Director General has made for two networks will need to be weighed carefully against the engineering contraints to which I have referred. Here again this may prove easier once applications have been received. Applicants will therefore have to state whether they are seeking to operate a single network with a maximum of 200 channels or one of two networks with a maximum of 100 channels each. They will also have to state whether they would accept a licence on either basis.

The Director General will, of course, give weight to this and other competition questions in preparing his recommendations on the applications for licences. But the Director General and I believe that some conditions should be laid down in advance. First, as with the two cellular radio networks, a nationwide radio network operator will be able to sell its services only to service providers. Specific permission will have to be sought to deal directly with end users. Secondly, because of the potential conflict of interest, the existing public telecommunications operators should not be allowed to become nationwide network operators, although this exclusion should not extend to their associated companies (including parents and subsidiaries). However, they should be allowed to be service providers.

The Director General has recommended that the particular dominance of BT is such that neither they nor their subsidiary companies should be allowed to be a nationwide network operator or service provider using it. I have decided that I must accept the Director General's advice on this issue. However, I agree with him it would be wrong to deprive the user of the potential expertise BT, in particular, possesses in this area and it would not be debarred from owning a minority holding in a service provider using a nationwide network. I also hope that BT and any other site owners will be prepared to negotiate for the use of their existing radio mast sites by any network operators.

I have considered carefully the Director General's advice that similar consideration should apply to Racal. In our discussion we concluded that the arguments were finely balanced and I have come to the conclusion that it would not be right to exclude Racal in this way. I will, however, ask the Director General to satisfy himself if it does apply that its proposal safeguards competitive policy.

I have already announced, on 28 January 1985 at columns 47-8, that no new national radio telephone service will be licenced before the position is reviewed towards the end of 1986. Applications for licences to operate a nationwide radio service should therefore be on the basis that there will be no PSTN interconnection. But I have accepted the Director General's advice that applicants may propose how interconnection would be used on their service, if permitted, and the Government may decide on the basis of these proposals to allow a limited degree of PSTN interconnection.

By no means all the demand for new private mobile services requires a nationwide system. In the interest of competition and to encourage smaller companies, I have decided to licence five smaller local networks of 20 channels in London and, to these as well, an invitation to apply for licences will be issued on 1 July and I have asked the Director General to consider these applications and to make recommendations. Copies of the notes for guidance for applicants can be obtained from OFTEL. In addition, my Department will on 1 July be inviting applications for licences to operate still smaller, local networks of five to 19 channels in the 10 areas of greatest demand for private mobile radio services (outside London) — Greater Manchester/Merseyside, Birmingham, Glasgow, Leeds/Bradford, Cardiff/Swansea, Aberdeen, the Nottingham area, Reading, the Northampton/Cambridge/Bedford area and the Tyne/Tees area. The timing of the decisions on the applications will be the same as for those for the nationwide service. The same conditions in the interest of competition — the division of the roles of network operators and service providers and limitations on the involvement of public telecommunications operators and BT, in particular — shall apply to the smaller networks as to the nationwide service, limited PSTN interconnection will be permitted on these networks, subject to the operators meeting specified minimum loading criteria. Applications may be made by the same person in respect of more than one area, but for no more than one 20-channel system in London. Copies of notes for guidance for applicants can be obtained from the Radio Regulatory Division of my Department.

I have allocated frequencies in the middle sub-band of bands III to users who have been displaced from bands II and mid-band, and I have made a block of frequencies around 139/148 MHz available for the fuel and power industry. Displaced users in band III will be required to use equipment conforming to specification MPT 1323. My Department is currently preparing a new specification for mobile radio equipments—MPT 1326—which is similar to MPT 1323 but will apply to bands other than band III and which generally conforms to a European recommendation. It is desirable that the limits which apply to the common elements of these specifications are the same and therefore it will be necessary to make minor amendments to MPT 1323. This will be of advantage to the mobile radio industry and also to the fuel and power industry, who may either adopt the new specification or use the relevant parts of the modified band III specification.

Also in the middle sub-band of band III, I have decided to allocate frequencies to a number of other users. First, the United Kingdom is developing at around 900 MHz a digital cordless telephone system suitable for domestic and small business use. Many aspects of it could have application in the development of cordless PBXs for use in offices. I intend to make available for cordless PBX systems five blocks each of 1 MHz, which cannot be used for a conventional radio system. Secondly, a study of the frequency requirements of the services ancilliary to broadcasting (such as radio microphones) has identified the need for six blocks of 0·7 MHz each in band III and I intend to allocate these for this purpose. Finally, the Government are considering the possibility of authorising the use of channels for two-way mobile data systems and I would welcome proposals.

The demands on the spectrum within band I, which was also released by the cessation of 405 line black and white TV services on 6 January of this year, have not yet emerged to as firm or as full an extent that we are able to settle the whole future of the bands. Moreover, my Department has only recently been able to begin discussions with neighbouring administrations about the use of the band.

Accordingly, I have decided to allocate only a limited number of frequencies to new band I users at this stage. First, as with band III, the study of the frequency requirements of the services ancillary to broadcasting has identified a need for 4 MHz and two other allocations of 0·35 MHz each in band I and I intend to allocate these for this purpose. Secondly, I am conscious that the interim Merriman report recommended that the radio amateur service should be given an allocation on the band and I am therefore proposing to fulfil that recommendation by allocating the band 50-50·50 MHz to radio amateurs. Thirdly, I intend to allocate 0·5 MHz within the band to satisfy the demand for further spectrum for on-site paging services. Finally, I intend to allocate the band 49·82-49·90 MHz for the use of general low power devices which have minimal potential for causing interference, such as toys and telemetry equipment. It is the intention that such low powered devices would be permitted to operate with the minimum of restriction and my Department will consider how to achieve this. Other claims for usage of band I are also being considered, for instance discussions are being conducted with industry to make an allocation for long-range security and other alarms and the band will also have attractions for mobile radio services.

On wide-area paging, in the light of the Director General's advice I have decided that the growth in the demand for national wide-area paging services is such that one or two new services should be introduced at 153 MHz and one or two more at 454 MHz. An invitation to apply by the beginning of October for licences to operate such services will be issued on 1 July and I have asked the Director General to consider these applications and to make recommendations by the end of the year. Copies of the notes for guidance for applicants can be obtained from OFTEL.

BT is in a particularly dominant position in the United Kingdom wide-area paging market and it has been argued that the existing operators should be given more time to develop in competition with BT before further operators are introduced. However, I believe that the Director General is right in advising that the balance of interest lies in allowing new competitors to BT to apply for licences for the new services. Such is BT's current market strength that it will not be among those allowed to apply, but its existing competitors will be eligible to apply.

Voice transmission as well as tone and data transmission, can be used at 454 MHz. Although it is more expensive in spectrum, I have decided that the nature of the demand is a more important consideration and that applicants for licences should be allowed to propose the use of frequency at 454MHz for voice transmission.

Finally, I have decided to make available spectrum, also at 153 MHz and 454 MHz, for pilot wide-area paging systems to enable demand for new services to be tested.

The points which the Director has made in his advice about licensing private paging systems as this becomes practicable and the relative utility of spectrum at 153 MHz to new and existing users have been accepted. On his suggestion that spectrum be made available at 900 MHz for paging services, I have to say that at present the potential conflict with other users seems to rule out such a move, though the position might change at a later date. In view of the uncertainty, I have decided not to invite applications at this frequency.

Competition and Retailing (Report)

Mr. Brandon-Bravo asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the report of the Director-General of Fair Trading on competition and retailing.

Mr. Fletcher: The Director-General's report was published today, 28 June 1985. The purpose of the study was to update certain statistical information in the 1981 Report of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission "Discounts to Retailers" as a basis for considering whether the MMC's findings were still valid in the present circumstances of the retail trade. The study was undertaken against the background of continuing concern among food manufacturers and small retailers about the effects of discounts on their businesses.

The MMC report examined the practice of charging some retailers lower prices than others, or providing special benefits to some retailers, where the difference could not be attributed to savings in the suppliers' costs. This practice is variously described as "discriminatory discounting" or "non cost related discounting". The MMC found that the practice had not, in general, operated against the public interest; rather the practice had been part and parcel of development which had been beneficial to competition and to the consumer. The Director-General's Report concludes that on the basis of the information collected there does not appear to be any material change in the factors which led the MMC to reach that finding.

The Director-General's report analyses recent developments in grocery retailing; financial statistics related to food manufacturing and retailing, including data on profitability; and information on manufacturers' trading terms and retailers' gross margins. It also reviews overseas legislation on price discrimination. On the basis of this data, the report concludes that, while there has been some further increase in concentration in grocery retailing since the MMC's report, competition in this sector remains very strong; and in general lower buying prices are being passed on to the benefit of consumers. The study found no evidence to suggest that the degree of price discrimination had increased since the MMC reported.

I welcome the Director-General's report. It confirms that substantial changes in the pattern of retailing in this country have taken place and continue to occur. These changes, which result from a number of deep-seated economic and social forces, have had (and will continue to have) wide repercussions, for retailers, the supplying industries and the consumer. Overseas experience suggests that Government intervention to prevent or mitigate these changes is unlikely to be effective, and would give rise to considerable problems of enforcement. Having regard to the present strength of competition in the sector and the benefits this is bringing to the consumer, I do not believe that such intervention would be justified. I will however be willing to review the position again if further developments give grounds for concern. In addition the Director-General has confirmed his continuing willingness to look into any allegations of anti-competitive behaviour or abuse of buying power under the competition legislation for which he is responsible.

Copies of the report have been placed in the Library.

EMPLOYMENT

Woolwich Jobcentre (Access)

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether the report from the Property Services Agency on the possibility of providing access for wheelchair users to the Woolwich jobcentre has now been received; and when a decision is likely to be announced.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Property Services Agency has completed its feasibility study of access by wheelchair users to the Woolwich jobcentre. In the light of the study further inquiries are being made of the landlord, the local authority and the fire and safety officer. A decision will be made as soon as the Manpower Services Commission has considered the study together with the results of its further inquiries.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number of unemployed people placed by the employment service in (a) 1979, (b) 1980, (c) 1981, (d) 1982, (e) 1983 and (f) 1984, respectively.

Mr. Alan Clark: Information is not available in the form requested. The following table shows the total numbers of placings made by jobcentres in Great Britain in the operational years 1979-80 to 1984-85. The numbers of these placings which were of unemployed persons are also shown for 1979-80, 1980-81 and 1981-82. These figures are not available for subsequent years.

Placing by jobcentres—Great Britain

Operational year	Total Placings	Unemployed jobseekers placed
1979-80	1,903,564	1,682,790
1980-81	1,534,405	1,379,074
1981-82	1,468,525	1,345,769
1982-83	1,550,494	—
1983-84	1,786,371	—
1984-85	1,977,626	—

Unemployment Benefit Recipients

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in receipt of unemployment benefit were referred by the employment service to an insurance officer for either refusing suitable employment or neglecting to avail themselves of opportunities of work in 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984, respectively.

Mr. Alan Clark: Information is not available in the form requested. The number of unemployment benefit claimants referred to the independent adjudication authorities from all sources (that is, the employment service, careers offices, DHSS, employers) for either refusing suitable employment or neglecting to avail themselves of opportunities of work, (Social Security Act, 1975 Part IIS20(1)) were:

	Number
1979	12,051
1980	15,083
1981	10,134
1982	6,711
1983	5,805

Figures are not currently available for 1984.

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of (a) fatal, (b) major and (c) minor accidents on the youth training scheme from 30 September to 30 May, showing the average number of persons in training in each month during that period and and the total number of entrants to the scheme in those three months.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Job-splitting Scheme (Portsmouth)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many job splits have been achieved under the job-splitting scheme in the Portsmouth area; and how these figures compare with his Department's original expectations.

Mr. Alan Clark: No estimates of the likely use of the scheme have been made on an area basis. Take-up overall has been disappointing but changes were made to the scheme from 1 April 1985 for instance, employers can now qualify for the £840 grant for providing two new part-time jobs for those leaving the youth training scheme, the community programme or certain other of our schemes. Many employers already recognise the value of flexible working arrangements and the improved job splitting scheme can help them realise the benefits.

Retail Prices Index

Mrs. Sally Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for Employment what was the increase in the retail price index in both percentage and absolute terms during (a) the period 1974 to 1979 and (b) the period 1979 to 1985 at the most recent date.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is as follows:

Retail Prices Index
January 1974—100·0
January 1979—207·2
May 1985—375·6

percentage changes:
January 1974—January 1979—107·2 per cent.
January 1979—May 1985—81·3 per cent.

THE ARTS

Arts Council (Funds)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts if he will give a breakdown of his calculations of 1983-84 Arts spending by the Greater London council and the metropolitan county councils upon which he based the extra funds to be made available to the Arts Council in 1986-87.

Mr. Waldegrave: From the information then available to us, and which I supplied to the hon. Member in reply to his question on 24 October 1983 at columns 27-28, the total budget estimates for the performing arts, film and museums in 1983-84 by the GLC and the six metropolitan county councils were £31,843,000 broken down as follows:

1983-84 £000's (Budget estimates)

	Revenue	Capital
Greater Manchester	2,393	566
Merseyside	5,298	*
South Yorkshire	153	70
Tyne and Wear	2,732	231
West Midlands	532	*
West Yorkshire	216	40
Greater London	18,315	1,297

* Not known.

After adjusting for prospective future revenue and capital expenditure on certain major projects then in course of development, and for inflation, the total estimates were equivalent to about £38 million in 1986-87 terms. Some £4 million of this represented provision for essentially local activities for which the successor borough and district councils could reasonably be expected to take responsibility. Of the announced £34 million additional central funding, £16 million is allocated to the Arts Council for the performing arts, £17 million is for museums and £1 million for film.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Taxation and Rates

Mr. Straw asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish estimates of (a) value added tax, (b) domestic rates, and (c) other indirect taxes, paid by those on (i) 75 per cent., (ii) 100 per cent. and (iii) 150 per cent. of average earnings in 1985-86 and each of the previous seven years; and if he will state the level of average earnings in each year.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

European Communities (Finance) Bill

Mr. Tracey asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make notes on clauses for the European Communities (Finance) Bill available to hon. Members.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Yes, a note was placed in the Vote Office yesterday.

ENVIRONMENT

Council House Sales

Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to when Mr. and Mrs. E. Long of 99 Red Post Hill may expect to receive the draft legal documents from Southwark council in respect of their application to purchase their home.

Sir George Young: I understand that Mr. and Mrs. Long's right to buy application was delayed principally by Southwark council's failure to produce a standard form of transfer for leasehold houses. My information is, however, that a standard form of transfer has now been prepared and is being despatched with other legal documentation to applicants. I expect Mr. and Mrs. Long to receive legal documentation by the end of June and for completion to take place within a month thereafter. I regret the delays caused by Southwark council.

Civil Defence (Water Authorities)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from water authorities on their progress towards drawing up civil defence plans; and if he will publish them in the Official Report.

Mr. Gow: I shall answer this question shortly.

Land Use Planning

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how often and by what means he intends to update strategic guidance on land use planning.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: The strategic guidance will be revised as and when necessary by the means that we have described in the debates on the Local Government Bill.

Central Lancashire Development Corporation

Mr. Dover asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangement he is making to permit the disposal to housing associations of the housing owned by Central Lancashire development corporation; and what changes to cash limits he proposes to make in consequence.

Mr. Gow: Agreement has been reached between the North British housing association, other housing associations, and the Central Lancashire development corporation for the housing associations to acquire the housing of the development corporation. To permit this acquisition, the approved development programme of the Housing Corporation (and the cash block DOE/HC1) will be increased by £86·8 million. To balance this, cash block DOE/NT1 will be reduced by the same amount, which will be covered by the capital receipts from the housing associations. The two cash blocks will be revised as follows:

Cash Block	Present Limit	£ million Revised Limit	Increase/ Decrease
DOE/NT1	−14·45	−101·25	−86·8
DOE/HC1	605·00	691·80	86·8

No net change in public expenditure is involved in these cash limit adjustments.

Home Loan Scheme

Mr. Powley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will increase the house price limits for the home loan scheme.

Mr. Gow: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, for Wales and for the Environment have reviewed the limits in order to ensure that at least two-thirds of first-time buyers in Scotland, Wales and the English regions will continue to qualify for the benefits of the scheme, provided they fulfil the savings conditions. The new limits reflect recent movements in house prices in each region. An order is being laid today to bring these new limits into effect from 20 July 1985.*

The new limits, compared with the present limits are as follows:

Area in which the property is situated	Homeloan benefits available for homes costing up to
	New Limits £	Present Limits £
ENGLAND
Northern region: counties of Cleveland, Cumbria, Durham, Northumberland and Tyne and Wear	21,500	20,100
Yorkshire and Humberside region: counties of Humberside, North Yorkshire, South Yorkshire and West Yorkshire	20,400	19,200
East Midlands region: counties of Derbyshire, Leicestershire, Lincolnshire, Northamptonshire and Nottinghamshire	22,100	20,400
East Anglia region: counties of Cambridgeshire, Norfolk and Suffolk	26,000	23,700
South East region:
London: County of Greater London	38,000	33,100
Rest of South East: counties of Bedfordshire, Berkshire, Buckinghamshire, East Sussex, Essex, Hampshire, Hertfordshire, Isle of Wight, Kent, Oxfordshie, Surrey and West Sussex	33,500	29,400
South West region: counties of Avon, Cornwall, Devon, Dorset, Gloucestershire, Somerset and Wiltshire; and the Isles of Scilly	28,200	25,700
West Midlands region: counties of Hereford and Worcester, Shropshire, Staffordshire, Warwickshire and West Midlands	21,900	20,700
North West region: counties of Cheshire, Greater Manchester, Lancashire and Merseyside	21,700	20,200
WALES	22,700	21,300
SCOTLAND	26,000	23,700

* Statutory Instrument 1985 No. 937: The Home Purchase Assistance (Price Limits) Order 1985.

Rate-capped Local Authorities

Mr. Watson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to enter into negotiations with any of the rate-capped local authorities.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin [pursuant to his reply, 14 March 1985, c. 219-20]: I was advised that the following payments should not be made to rating authorities until they had fixed their rates: rate rebate subsidy; grants towards rate relief for disabled persons and institutions; compensation to local authorities for loss of rate income in enterprise zones; and contributions in lieu of rates on Crown and diplomatic properties. As required by law and longstanding practice such payments are now being made to all authorities, including Liverpool, which have made a rate.

DEFENCE

155 mm Nuclear Shell

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he plans to have discussions with other North Atlantic Treaty Organisation Defence Ministers about the implications for the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation of the plans of the United States Government to fit the new 155 mm nuclear shell with an enhanced radiation module.

Mr. Stanley: I cannot at present add to the final communiqué of the NATO nuclear planning group meeting on 26-27 March 1985, a copy of which is in the Library.

"Statement on the Defence Estimates 1985"

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received following the recent publication of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1985".

Mr. Stanley: The Government have received a number of letters, parliamentary questions and other observations on the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1985", including those contained in the first and third reports from the Defence Committee.

RAF Airfields (Noise)

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Defence what progress is being made in his review of compensation for increased noise experienced by residents living near Royal Air Force airfields; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The review is nearing completion. My noble Friend, the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will be considering the outcome in due course.

Polaris Transporter (Helensburgh)

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the incident involving a Polaris transporter on the afternoon of Thursday 20 June on Sinclair Street, Helensburgh.

Mr. Stanley: The incident to which the hon. Member refers was a minor motor traffic accident involving two vehicles in a military convoy. For security reasons, it is not our practice to comment on the composition or load of military convoys.

Exercise Brave Defender

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether any of the key sites to be guarded during Exercise Brave Defender are in the Greater London area; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what land in the Greater London area, other than military land, is to be used during Exercise Brave Defender; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for Newark (Mr. Alexander) on 21 March, at columns 585-86. We do not intend to publish the list of exercise locations in advance of the exercise, as this could be prejudicial to the training value of the exercise and to exercise security.

TRANSPORT

Central Safety Barriers

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will outline the programme for central safety barriers on motorways and dual carriageways over the next five years.

Mrs. Chalker: Central reserve safety fences will be installed on all new motorways (expected length approximately 180 miles). Details of the motorway programme are given in the "National Roads England 1985" report (published 20 June) copies of which have been placed in the Library. Central reserve safety fences will be provided on new, all-purpose, dual carriageway trunk roads where the annual average daily traffic flow is expected to exceed 30,000 vehicles in the year of opening.

Details of predicted traffic flows on new all purpose dual carriageways are updated regularly. Thus information on the provision of safety fences for these roads is based on changing estimates and cannot be obtained repeatedly without incurring disproportionate costs. I can assure the hon. Member that safety fences will be provided on dual trunk roads whenever justified.

Cyclists (Accidents)

Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give statistics for the nature of injuries to cyclists resulting from accidents involving motor cars during 1984.

Mrs. Chalker: The nature of injuries sustained by road casualties is not collected by my Department. However, the following information is available:

Pedal cyclist injuries in two-party accidens with motor cars: 1982-84: Great Britain

	Fatal	Serious	Slight	Total
1982	132	3,460	16,058	19,650
1983	170	3,898	17,937	22,005
1984*	154	4.018	17,749	21,921

*Provisional.

Definitions of the severity of injury can be found in "Road Accidents Great Britain 1983", a copy of which is in the Library.

Roads

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Transport what policy criteria he uses to determine the relative priorities in expenditure on the roads programme of (a) new road building, (b) motorway repair and (c) trunk road bypasses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: Our policy criteria for spending on roads remain as set out in successive White Papers and roads reports. Within the total funds available for the national programme new road schemes, including bypasses, bring substantial new economic and environmental benefits and remain a top priority, balance by the need to preserve the investment already made by carrying out timely renewal and repair work. New construction will continue to account for most of the spending on national roads, but we also intend to eliminate the backlog of necessary motorway repair work that arose in the 1970s.

Bypasses

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number of bypasses built on trunk road schemes in each of the last 10 years, giving the annual expenditure by his Department on such schemes.

Mr. Ridley: The information requested is as follows:

	Number of by-passes (including Relief Roads) completed	Expenditure £m (cash)*
1975-76	23	107
1976-77	16	104
1977-78	11	71
1978-79	9	57
1979-80	7	70
1980-81	4	93
1981-82	7	106
1982-83	11	92
1983-84	7	73
1984-85	10	112

* These figures show total annual expenditure on the national road by-pass programme.

In 1975-76 the 130 bypass schemes in the programme amounted to 26 per cent. of the forward national programme. This year the 170 schemes amount to 50 per cent.

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number of bypass approvals to trunk roads agreed by his Department in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Ridley: The number of bypasses, including relief roads, added to the national road construction programme in England is as follows:

	Number
1976-77	17
1977-78	—
1978-79	10
1979-80	—
1980-81	8
1981-82	15
1982-83	13
1983-84	15
1984-85	5
1985-86	*25

* To date.

Other schemes in the programme, including M25, also have a bypassing effect, while many schemes relieve more than one community of through traffic.

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many towns on trunk roads in the United Kingdom do not have bypasses; and what was the equivalent number in 1979.

Mr. Ridley: In May 1979 there were 503 town and village communities on national roads in England that did not have a bypass. That figure now stands at 391 communities, for which schemes to bypass 280 are already included in my forward construction programme. Responsibility for national roads elsewhere in the United Kingdom rests with my right hon. Friends.

A20 (Dover-Folkestone)

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the annual through-put of traffic along the Dover-Folkestone section of the A20, distinguishing between cars, light vans, and heavy goods vehicles; and how many accidents have occurred on this section of road in each of the last 10 years, listing both fatal and severe injuries separately.

Mr. Ridley: The annual traffic through-put in 1983 on the A20 between Folkestone and Dover was as follows (thousands of vehicles):

	000's
Cars and Taxis	3,100
Light Goods Vehicles	290
Heavy Goods Vehicles	550

Accident data for this section of road are as follows:

Accidents on the Folkestone—Dover Stretch of the A20

	Severity of Accident
	Fatal	Serious	Slight	Total
1980	0	12	34	46
1981	1	8	21	30
1982	1	9	28	38
1983	2	5	30	37
1984	1	12	29	42

Casualties on the Folkstone Dover stretch of the A20

	Severity of Injury
	Fatal	Serious	Slight	Total
1980	0	12	52	64
1981	1	9	32	42
1982	1	10	40	51
1983	3	6	43	52
1984	1	18	39	58

The provision of accident data for earlier years would be disproportionately expensive.

Cyclists

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy towards the incorporation in roundabout schemes of cycle routes with sight lines; and what is his policy towards the use of kerbs to divide cycle paths from pedestrian walkways.

Mr. Ridley: I continue to look for suitable solutions whenever the question of cycle routes arises in roundabout schemes.

Advice on kerbs to divide cycle tracks from pedestrian ways is contained in "Local Transport Note 1/78 Ways of Helping Cyclists in Built-up Areas". A copy of this has been deposited in the Library.

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he will give to facilities for cyclists and pedestrians in assessing the outcome of the public inquiry into the Crooked Billet roundabout, Walthamstow.

Mr. Ridley: The inspector conducting the inquiry will report on the proposed cycling and pedestrian facilities, as he will on other relevant issues. In conjunction with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment I shall fully consider all aspects of his report when I receive it.

A38 (Safety Barriers)

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he proposes to start work on the A38 safety barriers between Plympton and Bittaford, and between Syon Abbey and Dean Prior.

Mrs. Chalker: Work will start as soon as possible, but of course we now have to make the necessary contract arrangement so I cannot for the moment give a firm date.

Boeing 747 (Tests)

Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for Transport when the evacuation tests required by the Civil Aviation Authority for British Airways Boeing 747s following the elimination of the mid-fuselage escape doors took place; and what were the precise test conditions.

Mr. Ridley: The CAA tell me that when the Boeing 747 was first granted a certificate of airworthiness with 10 main emergency exits, it met the requirements that a full load of 550 passengers could be evacuated in not more than 90 seconds using only half the total number of exits. The blocked overwing exits displayed lower exit rates than the other emergency exits in the test. The aircraft with currently approved United Kingdom layouts of up to 440 seats allows for the increase in capacity following the blocking of the two overwing exits, and therefore also meets the requirements. The CAA thus has no regulatory basis for requiring another evacuation test.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Drugs Offences

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the total number of charges brought for (a) possession, (b) dealing and (c) import of (i) class A drugs, (ii) class B drugs and (iii) class C drugs in the Metropolitan and Merseyside police districts in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Mellor: The available information is given in the following table.

Charges brought and proceeded with at court in 1983 for unlawful supply, possession or unlawful importation of controlled drugs in the Metropolitan and Merseyside Police force areas*

Number of charges

	Class A drugs	Class B drugs	Class C drugs	†All controlled drugs
Metropolitan police district
Unlawful supply	302	301	—	581
Possession with intent to supply unlawfully	253	508	9	606
Unlawful possession	1,717	8,753	29	9,569
Unlawful import	45	53	—	93
Merseyside
Unlawful supply	24	51	—	53
Possession with intent to supply unlawfully	28	39	3	44
Unlawful possession	153	463	3	521
Unlawful import	4	3	—	6

* As one charge may involve more than one class of drug columns cannot be added together to produce totals.
† Includes a small number of charges where details of the drug involved were not available.

Police National Computer

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will take steps to permit individuals to have access to their own records on the police national computer in order to seek to correct errors; what arrangements are currently operating to correct errors; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will describe the audit and logging procedures currently employed with the names indexes of the police national computer; and whether in cases of abuse these procedures would identify the officer who performed the check and the number of requests made by that officer.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Under the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984, individuals will have access to data on the police national computer which relates to them, subject to the condition that grant of access will not prejudice the prevention or the detection of crime, or the apprehension and prosecution of offenders. The Act also provides for the retification and erasure of inaccurate data.

At present, data input to the PNC is checked automatically by the computer system, as well as by the operators who enter the data and by those who prepare the data for entry. In addition, each police force has designated an assistant chief constable to audit twice yearly on a sample basis the records on the wanted, missing, suspected and found persons file which relate to his force.

All PNC transactions are recorded centrally on magnetic tape by the PNC. These records indicate the time of the transaction as well as the terminal from which it originated. In addition, each force is instructed by the Department to log all PNC transactions in such a way as to enable each transaction to be associated with both the terminal operator and the officer who initiated the inquiry.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements there are to remove spent data from the police national computer; how many people are employed to undertake this work; whether such work comprises all or part of their duties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The information held on the police national computer is weeded continuously not only by the staff of the national identification bureau but also by individual forces and by the PNC itself. Given the nature of the information held on the various indices of the PNC, most of the weeding is done by forces as part of their normal day to day crime prevention and detection activity and the only way of determining the total amount of effort devoted specifically to this task would be by means of a manpower utilisation survey which could be mounted only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department which constabularies have or intend to have an interface with the police national computer; and if he will indicate the nature of the linkage.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The following forces have or intend to have an interface with the Police National Computer to permit the force to have direct access to the PNC from terminals connected to the force's own computer system:

Bedford
Cambridge
Cleveland
Cumbria
Durham
Fife
Grampian
Humberside
Lincolnshire
Merseyside
Metropolitan
Northamptonshire
North Yorkshire
Nottingham
South Wales
Staffordshire
Suffolk
Sussex
Warwickshire
West Mercia
West Midlands
Wiltshire
Avon and Somerset
Cheshire
Essex
Hertfordshire
Kent
Northumbria
Scottish Criminal Record Office which is intended in turn to be interfaced with all forces in Scotland
South Yorkshire

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state the percentage of checks to the names indexes of the police national computer that do not return a name because that name is absent from the indexes.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The table sets out for two recent days (1) the percentage of checks on particular PNC names indices which elicted a "no trace" response and (2) the percentage of checks on two or three of these indices simultaneously which elicted a "no trace" response.

Index Checked	Percentage of "No Traces"
	11 June	14 June
(1) Criminal Names	38·3	37·9
(2) Wanted, Missing Suspected and Found Persons	56·9	58·6
(3) Disqualified Drivers	36·5	21·4

Index Checked	Percentage of "No Traces"
Indices (1) and (2)	24·5	25·9
Indices (1), (2) and (3)
Total Checks	28·0	27·6

It would be possible only at disproportionate cost to indentify separately those cases where an inquiry directed at two or three names indices simultaneously elicted a "no trace" response in repect of one or two of these indices.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what arrangements are made to seek to ensure that the names of people not convicted of an offence are not included in the criminal names index of the police national computer; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether any individual arrested by the police has been entered on the criminal names index of the police national computer along with the alleged offence concerned prior to either charges not being proceeded with or the person being acquitted of the offence in court; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what are the criteria for who (a) is recorded upon the criminal names index of the police national computer, (b) is kept on the index and (c) is removed from the index; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Only staff of the national identification bureau may enter records in the criminal names index of the police national computer. A person's name is entered onto the criminal names index if, and only if, the national identification bureau has been notified that the individual concerned has been charged with, or reported for, a recordable offence. If the individual is subsequently acquitted of the offence, and if there is no record of his having been convicted of any previous recordable offence, his name is deleted from the index. Exceptions may apply in relation to offences under section 27(3) of the Theft Act 1968 and section 6(3) of the Sexual Offences Act 1956 where the individual has pleaded his statutory defence and in cases of continuing interest such as where a person is bound over when the charge has been dismissed.

Records on the criminal names index are regularly weeded by the national identification bureau in accordance with the following criteria.

A. Data subjects over 70 years of age: records are weeded if the following conditions are met:
   (i) the subject has not been hard of in the last 10 years (ie no new information has been added to the microfiche record in that period);
   (ii) the subject was neither convicted of murder nor was a murder victim; and
   (iii) the record is not of special interest.

B. Data subjects between 40 and 70 years of age: records are weeded if the following conditions are met:
   (i) the subject has not been heard of in the last 20 years;
   (ii) there is only one conviction on the NIB record (minor offences are disregarded), no subsequent breach of probation and no outstanding proceedings;
   (iii) the aggregate sentence for the conviction did not exceed 6 months imprisonment (including suspended sentences);
   (iv) there is no record of any mental illness;
   (v) there is no record of any sexual offence or indecency;
   (vi) the subject was neither convicted of murder nor was a murder victim; and
   (vii) the record is not of special interest.

C. Data subjects under 40 years of age: records are weeded if all the conditions at B are met and the data subject was under the age of 14 at the time of conviction.

Notes:

(1) "Special interest" refers to notable criminals or to crimes which the police consider to be of special significance or of national historical interest. Such records and all those involving murder are retained idenfinitely.

(2) Records are weeded 18 months after a police force has reported the subject as having died, unless they are of special interest or involve murder.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what rules apply for access to the information contained in the police national computer indexes to avoid such information going to unauthorised persons and companies; whether there are any limitations upon which police officers may obtain access; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Rules about access to information contained on the police national computer are set out in the "Code of Practice for the Protection of Personal Data Held on the Police National Computer", a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many individuals are on the criminal names index of the police national computer whose offences are time-expired so far as any reference to them in any subsequent court appearance is concerned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: This information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when it is proposed that all miners pickets' cars will be removed from the seen or checked entry by the police in noteworthy circumstances category of the police national computer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No miners' cars are currently the subject of record on the police national computer by virtue of having been used in connection with picketing in an industrial dispute.

Privately Owned Swimming Pools

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to implement in full the recommendations of the working party which reviewed the safety precautions prevailing at privately owned swimming pools open to the public.

Mr. Giles Shaw: As indicated by the then Home Secretary my right hon. Friend Viscount Whitelaw in his reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Romford (Mr. Neubert) on 27 July 1979, it had then been decided that no further action should be taken on the recommendations of the working party on water safety that had reported two years previously. This remains the position.

Police Practice (Scarman Report)

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has had on the effect of changes in police practice following the Scarman report.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Following the 1981 riots and the Scarman report changes have been introduced in police training, recruitment, community relations, consultative procedures, and public order tactics and equipment. It is not possible to summarise the representations received on such a wide range of matters: if the hon. Member has a particular point in mind I would be glad to consider it.

Indian Sub-continent (Visitors)

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many visitors were admitted into the United Kingdom from India, Pakistan, Bangladesh and Sri Lanka in 1984; how many of those left; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: The numbers admitted as visitors were published in table 1 of the annual Command Paper "Control of Immigration: Statistics, United Kingdom 1984", Cmnd. 9544. Corresponding information on embarkation is not available.

Police (Manchester)

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department by how much the total manpower available to the Greater Manchester police force has increased since May 1979; how much of the increase relates to police officers; and how many are civilian support staff.

Mr. Giles Shaw: On 31 May 1985 there were 6,714 police officers and 1,803 civilian staff in the Greater Manchester police, an increase in total manpower since May 1979, of 520 (274 police officers, and 246 civilian staff, 51 of them part-time).

Rubens Hotel, London (Bomb)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the origin of the explosive material in the bomb found at the Rubens hotel, London, on 23 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brittan: The bomb is still being examined by forensic experts. The origin of the explosive material it contains has not yet been established.

Terrorism

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make a statement about the latest discussions with European and other Ministers concerning international measures against terrorism.

Mr. Brittan: I attended a meeting of Ministers of Justice of the Council of Europe in Edinburgh on 14 June. At that meeting, the Committee of Ministers was requested to set up a body to be in order to carry out "concrete and relentless action" against terrorism. It is intended that this body will meet later in the year. I have had a number of bilateral meetings with individual European Ministers, most recently with the French and Italian Ministers of the Interior, and have established a joint Italian-United Kingdom working party to improve co-operation between our two countries. I attended the Trevi meeting in Rome on 21 June where I and other Ministers re-affirmed our determination to combat terrorism and resolved to hold Ministerial meetings more frequently in the future.

"open to all Ministers who, in their respective Council of Europe Governments, are responsible for combating terrorism"

Crime and Unemployment

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what studies have been made into the correlation between crime and unemployment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: An article reviewing studies on the relationship between unemployment and crime was published in the Home Office research and planning unit research bulletin Number 14, 1982. The evidence from correlational studies is mixed and inconclusive. The Department has no plans to carry out further studies on this topic at present.

Racial Harassment (Newham)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if any special measures have been taken to counter racial harassment in the London borough of Newham.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis shares our very great concern about racial harassment and has identified the handling of racial incidents, which include racial harassment, as a priority for police activity within the Metropolitan police area.

An analysis of racial incidents in 1984 in Newham revealed that 70 per cent. of incidents occurred in or near the victim's home. In consequence new reporting and investigating procedures were introduced in "K" district which involve home beat officers operating under close supervision by Inspectors and follow up visits made to victims by the police community liaison officer. In cases where the police have identified problems which require more detailed analysis they seek co-operation from other agencies in the community.

The police are actively seeking greater co-operation with local community leaders and the development of better understanding between the police and the community at large and particularly with the young. I understand that the police are discussing with the borough council the making of consultative arrangements under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act, within the guidelines my right hon. and learned Friend issued last January.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the police detection and clear-up rates for racial harassment in the London borough of Newham for the years (a) 1983, (b) 1984 and (c) 1985;

(2) if he will list the police detection rates (a) for burglary in the home, (b) for robbery, (c) for auto theft and (d) for racial harassment on the London borough of Newham for each of the last five years.

Mr. Mellor: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the information requested relating to burglary in a dwelling, robbery and the theft of motor vehicles for the years 1981-84 is as given in the table; corresponding figures for 1980 are not readily available. Clear-up rates for recorded offences do not distinguish racial from non-racial incidents.

*Offences of burglary in a dwelling, robbery and theft or unauthorised taking of a motor vehicle recorded by the police in the London Borough of Newham which were cleared up

	1981	1982	1983	1984
Number of offences cleared up
Burglary in a dwelling	256	286	210	257
Robbery	71	61	47	77
Theft or unauthorised taking of motor vehicle	24	17	15	16
Percentage cleared up
Burglary in a dwelling	10	8	6	7
Robbery	24	17	15	16
Theft or unauthorised taking of motor vehicle	10	12	10	10

* Offences cleared up in one year may include offences initially recorded in previous years.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total amount (a) invoiced for and (b) received by the Metropolitan police for police services from (i) sporting events, excluding football, (ii) private companies, (iii) nationalised industries and (iv) ceremonial events for each of the past three complete financial years.

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to his reply, 15 May 1985, c. 125]: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that the information requested is as follows:

Amounts invoiced for and received to date (31 May 1985) by the Metropolitan Police for police services, by financial year

	1982-83		1983-84		1984-85
	Invoiced £	Received £	Invoiced £	Received £	Invoiced £	Received £
(a) sporting events and leisure activities*	337,569	332,078	488,490	487,056	420,178	419,858
(b) other private companies	11,312	11,092	17,282	16,488	21,079	19,133
(c) nationalised industries	9,804,989	9,804,989	10,732,389	10,732,389	11,175,125	11,175,125

* excludes football matches other than those at Wembley Stadium.

Police services in categories (a) and (b) are provided and paid for in accordance with section 15 of the Police Act 1964. The only nationalised industry which the Metropolitan Police invoiced for police services was the British Airports Authority, in accordance with section 26 of Aviation Security Act 1982.

The policing of ceremonial events constitutes a normal police function, the cost of which generally falls to be met from the Metropolitan Police Fund. But in accordance with section 15 of the Police Act 1964, the Roman Catholic Church was invoiced for and paid for Metropolitan police services provided on private premises during the papal visit in May 1982.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total amount received by the Metropolitan police in each of the past five years for policing services other than from statutory funding sources.

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to his reply, 15 May 1985, c. 125]: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that the total amount received by the Metropolitan police for police services, other than from direct Government grants and the precept, in each of the last five financial years, was as follows:

1980-81	20,298,881·46
1981-82	17,207,215·33
1982-83	22,507,996·85
1983-84	30,023,224·20
1984-85	26,739,868·01

These figures relate to receipts from sporting events (including football matches), leisure activities, private companies, nationalised industries, Government departments and local authorities. Receipts for mutual aid provided to other police forces are excluded.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Funeral Expenses

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many death grants are paid in respect of funerals provided by local authorities or health authorities.

Mr. Whitney: No statistics are kept on the categories of people to whom death grants are paid, and information on the number of funerals provided by local authorities and health authorities is not held centrally.

Health Services (North-West)

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the increase in cash terms and in real terms in the amount of money available to health services in the north-west region between 1978-79 and 1983-84.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Revenue spending on health services in north-western region increased by 101·1 per cent. in cash terms between 1978-79 and 1983-84, representing an increase in real terms of 18·1 per cent. after taking account of general inflation as measured by the gross domestic product deflator.

Board and Lodging

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether travel warrants are being made available by his Department's local offices to enable claimants of board and lodging allowance under the age of 26 years to move away from the current place of residence after the four or eight week period allowed under regulations has expired; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The circumstances in which single payments of supplementary benefit can be made for travelling expenses of unemployed boarders aged 25 or under are set out in paragraph 122 of Circular S13/85, a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what are the latest available figures for the number of claimants excluded from boarder status under Regulations 9(14) of the Supplementary Benefit (Requirements) Regulations 1983 since, in the opinion of the benefit officer, they were on holiday; and if he will give this information for Great Britain as a whole, for England, Wales and Scotland, and for each Department of Health and Social Services region;

(2) what information he has as to the number of landlords of ordinary board and lodging establishments, excluding registered hostels, who catered exclusively for supplementary benefit claimants at the time when he laid the Supplementary Benefit (Requirements and Resources) Miscellaneous Provisions Regulations 1985 before the House; and if he will break down the information for Great Britain as a whole, for England, Wales and Scotland, and for each Department of Health and Social Services region;

(3) what information he has as to the number of landlords of ordinary board and lodging establishments, excluding registered hostels, who charged higher weekly rates for claimants of supplementary benefit than for people not claiming supplementary benefit at the time when he laid the Supplementary Benefit (Requirements and Resources) Miscellaneous Provisions Regulations 1985 before the House; and if he will give this information for Great Britain as a whole, for England, Wales and Scotland, and for each Department of Health and Social Services region;

(4) what information he can provide concerning the number of landlords of ordinary board and lodging establishments, excluding registered hostels, who set their charges solely by reference to the local supplementary benefit upper limits at the time when he laid the Supplementary Benefit (Requirements and Resources) Miscellaneous Provisions Regulations 1985 before the House; and if he will give this information for Great Britain as a whole, for England, Wales and Scotland, and for each of his Department's regions.

Mr. Whitney: Information in the form requested is not collected centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Specialist Claims Control

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when special claims control staff will next visit Leith; and if he will make a statement regarding information gathered from previous investigations into alleged fraud in the area.

Mr. Whitney: A specialist claims control exercise started in the local office at Edinburgh, North, which covers Leith, on 24 June. Two previous exercises have been conducted in that office during which benefit was adjusted in 46 of the 133 cases examined.

Vaccine Damage Payments

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to pay a further £10,000 to all those who have received a payment under the Vaccine Damage Payments Act 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: As the right hon. Member is aware, a Government amendment has now been added to the current Social Security Bill to enable us to raise the figure of £10,000 contained in the Vaccine Damage Payments Act 1979. Subject to the enactment of the Bill as amended, we shall place an order before the House as soon as possible with details of our proposals; but we have no plans to make extra payments of the kind the right hon. Member suggests.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people received awards under the Vaccine Damage Payments Act 1979 in each of the last three years.

Mr. Newton: The information is as follows:

Year	Awards
1982	43
1983	42
1984	29

Health Education Council

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what steps he takes to ensure that the membership of the Health Education Council is representative of regional interests in health education; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement on the criteria by which individuals are selected for membership of the Health Education Council.

Mr. John Patten: Members of the Health Education Council are appointed because of the expertise and personal qualities which they can bring to the council's work. In making appointments to the council, Ministers aim to achieve a reasonable geographical spread of membership, but members are not appointed as representatives of specific interests.

Health Authorities (Competitive Tendering)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many staff in his Department are responsible for communicating with health authorities on competitive tendering programmes.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Most of our work on such programmes is undertaken by a unit of four staff but some 50 other staff may be involved in such communications from time to time.

Nurses

Mr. Campbell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the average working hours of a student nurse according to each of the three stages of training; if he will provide a breakdown of all hours worked, including refreshment times; and how this compares with each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not have the information requested readily available. Student nurses in each year of training have standard contracted hours of 37½ per week exclusive of meal times, in common with all grades of nursing staff. We reduced the contracted hours from 40 per week in 1980-81.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether any nurse whose retirement date is between 1 April 1985 and 31 January 1986 will receive a pension calculated on the basis of 1984-85 salary plus the 5 per cent. award made in the first stage of the recent pay award; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Yes. As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister explained in her reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Forth) on 6 June at columns 194-96, it is our practice to base pensions on the salaries actually in payment at or in the period before the date of retirement.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the numbers of nurses who are expected to take retirement in the financial year 1985-86; and of those, how many are expected to take retirement: (a) before 1 February 1986 and (b) after 1 February 1986.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not have centrally the precise information requested but from past experience we estimate that about 4,200 nurses in England and Wales will retire in the financial year 1985-86.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the pension which a nurse on the maximum of her scale could expect to receive for each of the following grades: auxiliary, staff nurse, sister II and district nurse.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Retirement benefits under the National Health Service superannuation scheme depend on length of service, superannuable earnings in the most beneficial of the last three years of service and a variety of other relevant factors which can be precisely determined only in relation to individual circumstances.

Medical Equipment (Development)

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether his Department intends to provide a share of the funding required for the purposes of the development in co-operation with Gaelt Research Ltd. of Ross-shire of a disposable medical pressure transducer sensor; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Yes. The Department has agreed to share the development costs for one year in the first instance. Funding for a further year will be agreed if progress in the first year is satisfactory.

Departmental Records

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how information is recorded in his Department's offices regarding those people in receipt of (a) death grant, (b) maternity allowance, (c) special diet supplement and (d) special laundry supplement.

Mr. Whitney: Information on claims to social security benefits is recorded on claim forms. Statistics for the benefits in question are produced as follows:

Death Grant — Local offices produce four-weekly returns of claims. Statistics of awards are produced quarterly using a national sample.

Maternity Allowance — Local offices produce four-weekly returns of claims. Statistics of claims (quarterly) and awards and claims (annual) are produced using a national sample.

Special Diet Supplement; Special Laundry Supplement — No local statistics are produced. Centrally available information on these and other additional requirements is derived from the Supplementary Benefits Annual Statistical Enquiry. This is a sample survey of claimants receiving regular weekly payments of benefit at a particular point in time.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why it is not possible to produce figures for those people in receipt of state earnings-related pensions at his Department's offices in Canning Town, Plaistow and Woodgrange Park.

Mr. Whitney: The information held centrally includes details of the pensioner's local office but this information is not accessed for normal statistical purposes. A special computer run, which would involve searching over 9 million records, would entail disproportionate cost.

Orthopaedic Treatment

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the incidence of hip replacement operations carried out within National Health Service hospitals both privately and on the National Health Service over each of the last three years.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 17 June 1985, c. 54]: The available information is:

NHS hospitals, England—Estimated number of hip replacement operations

Year	NHS patients	Private patients	Total
1981	32,410	2,370	34,780
1982*	32,170	1,560	33,730
1983 (provisional)	35,800	1,520	37,320

* Surgical activity in 1982 was generally affected by industrial action in the NHS.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 81

SESSION 1984-85

17th June—28th June 1985

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There will, however, be headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one will find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc., under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speakers rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R=first reading, 2R=second reading, Money res=money resolution, Com=Committee stage, Rep=Report stage, 3R=third reading, amendt/amendts=amendment/amendments, *=matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
